John Steinbeck and Angel in Sag Harbor, 1966

Steinbeck Redux

The Famous Author Instructs the President on the Best Firearms

By Dan Rattiner

About a month ago, I wrote an article in this newspaper about Austin, Texas, a city I was visiting to attend a family wedding. I found it a fascinating place, a little blue dot in the middle of a big red state, as everybody pointed out. The only Democratic outpost in Bush Country.

Among other things we did while we were there was visit the LBJ Library, which has as its central feature, four floors of notes, papers, letters and briefings of the presidency of Lyndon Baines Johnson. Little did I know that among those papers was a letter written by John Steinbeck, the Nobel Prize winning author who was perhaps Sag Harbor's most famous resident.

The library didn't know it had it, either. It was only discovered in those archives a few weeks before we were there by a historian named David Vines. And though I reprint it at the end of this article, you might not like it. Steinbeck is weighing in on what sort of weapons the American soldiers ought to use to win the Vietnam War. One of these, as he writes, he actually tries out in Sag Harbor and indeed it gives maximum effect.

A little background is perhaps in order. Steinbeck's most famous work, The Grapes of Wrath, is about the sufferings of the working man during the Depression in America, something which Steinbeck and many others lay at the feet of Big Business. Steinbeck, in the 1930s, briefly joined the Communist Party, but he soon found it too regimented and too much like, as he said, a religion. He bowed out.

His flirtation with the Communist Party did not go unnoticed, however. And when World War II broke out and he tried to enlist, he was rejected as a security risk. He spent the war years as a sort of macho war correspondent for the New York Herald Tribune. He also found himself under investigation by those seeking to root out Communists. Even though the Communists were at the time our allies in the war against Germany and Japan.

In a letter to General Francis Biddle at the beginning of that war, he famously asked him to ask J. Edgar Hoover to bug off.

"Do you suppose you could get Edgar's boys to stop stepping on my heels?" he wrote. "They think I am an enemy alien. It's getting tiresome."

If Steinbeck was no Communist, however, he was very much in favor of programs that favored the poor, the disadvantaged and the working class. By the time Jack Kennedy ran for President in 1960, Steinbeck was a highly decorated writer with a reputation matching that of Ernest Hemingway. He had moved to Sag Harbor. And he was approaching sixty. (Half a dozen more books and several screen plays lay ahead of him.) During the Presidential campaign, he befriended JFK and supported him, and after JFK was assassinated, he continued to remain friends with Lyndon Johnson, who had become President upon the death of JFK. He kept LBJ informed of things, if his letter is any indication, by directing his advice to LBJ's Special Assistant, Jack Valenti.

By late 1965, America was sending astronauts up to circle the Earth, we were in the middle of the Cold War against the Russians, and people were demonstrating against things, mostly against the segregation of blacks in the South. The March on Selma happened that

Russell Simmons, hip-hop mogul and Hamptonite, announced last week that his marriage to model-turned-entrepreneur, Kimora Lee, is over after seven years. They have two young daughters. The couple met during New York fashion week in 1992 when Kimora was 17 and still in high school and Russell was 35, and they have two children together, Ming Lee and Aoki Lee, ages three and six, who both model. The couple maintains they will still remain friends and will continue to work alongside one another as heads of the Baby Phat clothing empire. This news comes at the same time as the exciting announcement that HBO has signed a comprehensive deal with Simmons Lathan Media Group, run by Simmons and Stan Lathan, to develop scripted series, comedy specials and other projects.

She met Jordan Juicy j Houston at a William Morris Agency party and told him she likes their song "Fly Star," after which the group asked her to record with them.

BREAKING NEWS

Immigrant March

Thousands of Latinos lined up in New York City last Saturday, holding flags from over a dozen different Latin countries. The large gathering was a march that stretched more than a mile, across the Brooklyn Bridge. The purpose of the march was to demonstrate their opposition to possible immigration reform that is being considered in Congress.

Interestingly, the march began in downtown Brooklyn, an area first settled by the Dutch, with loud drums, trumpets and noise. They passed by the Statue of Liberty, Middle Eastern hot dog vendors, and taxicabs driven by Russians, Arabs, Chinese and Turks. They then crossed the Brooklyn Bridge, which was designed by a German, and finished in Chinatown in an area that was once an Irish slum.

year. The Black Panthers were a power. Many, Martin Luther King Jr. among them, saw the Civil Rights Act as just the beginning. It had been passed the year before through the efforts of LBJ. At the same time, the Women's Movement was just getting underway.

Little noticed at the time was the latest American effort to hold back the Soviet tide. America was propping up a military regime in South Vietnam. We had about 15,000 advisors to the South Vietnamese army in the country. And in a little known incident at the time in the Bay of Tonkin off South Vietnam, North Vietnamese warships sank an American gunboat. LBJ couldn't allow this to happen. He would send 25,000 troops to Vietnam to bolster up the 15,000 advisors. And they would put down what they saw as a Communist rebellion in the South by the Russian ruled Vietnam in the north. The troops went. And LBJ ordered another 35,000 to follow. By the end of the year, almost 1,500 American troops had died. And though a protest in Washington brought out 20,000 peace marchers, the administration vowed that Vietnam could not be allowed to fall. If it fell, like a bunch of dominoes, the rest of southeast Asia — Burma, Singapore, Thailand, maybe even the Phillipines and Australia — would fall under the thumb of the Russians.

(In recent years, evidence has been found to suggest that the Gulf of Tonkin incident, which touched off LBJ's decision to never yield Vietnam, was cooked up by the military. Sound familiar?)

Steinbeck wrote his letter sometime in late November, 1965. On January 14, 1966, Jack Valenti sent the following memo to Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara. In it, he quotes Steinbeck's letter liberally. And it is in this form, as a memo, that this letter survives. Here it is.

* * *

January 14, 1966

From Jack Valenti

Dear Frank:

From time to time, John Steinbeck, the Nobel Prize-winning novelist, writes me. He's a fascinating man, with a kind of imaginative flair for war and its weaponry. (I excerpt from his letter, for it bears on your business. It presents three different suggestions.)

"I am glad the bombing has been stopped and the peace feelers are out, and for reasons beyond the basic humanitarian ones. I hope the bombing will not be necessary again, but will you offer my suggestion that if bombs are indicated, we should throw everything we can into one colossal strike and then stop again? You see, I was in the Blitz in London. People can get used to anything except what they don't expect. Daily or nightly attacks can be taken in stride; it's when the pattern is broken that they get uneasy. A big strike, a pause for talk, and then if necessary another, but at irregular intervals, has devastating effect. And after each one—the question—will you talk now?

"The two other suggestions may well already be used, but if not, should be. In bush country the rifle is an inferior weapon for big game. If you see something moving, your chance of hitting it with a rifle is slight. An open-bore 12-gauge or, if you're man enough, a 10-gauge automatic shotgun loaded with 00 buckshot makes a much more effective weapon. At forty yards one spread of 00 will bring down several running men and with only casual aim. Of course, you can spray the area with automatic rifle fire, but the weight in ammunition is much greater. For a man with a good wrist, a 12-gauge single-shot pistol chambered for buckshot would be effective.

Providing the Artists and Sculptors of East Hampton With a Workplace

By Dan Rattiner

During this past week, East Hampton began to rethink their zoning policies about artist's studios in people's back yards. A number of ideas came up at a Town Board meeting. There will be more discussions.

This consideration is long overdue, in that East Hampton, and particularly the Springs section of that town, is the home to hundreds of artists, many of whom are well known. East Hampton is also, historically, the cradle of the Abstract Expressionist and particularly the drip painting movement of the mid-twentieth century. Some of the most famous painters in the world lived here from that era, including Jackson Pollock, Willem de Kooning, Franz Klein, cartoonist Saul Steinberg and Robert Rauschenberg. In more recent times, other painters have come to live on the East End, but the center of focus has shifted. And so people such as Ross Bleckner, Larry Rivers, Fairfield Porter, Jane Freilicher and Alfonso Ossorio, all world class, came to make their homes in Southampton and Water Mill rather than East Hampton.

The reason is largely because of the draconian artist's studio regulations that came into effect in the 1970s. Unlike Southampton Town, East Hampton will not give a C. O. to a detached building used as an art studio if it has a bathroom in it. The thinking is that if you do that, when the artist leaves or passes on, the owner of the property can then rent it out as a cottage to someone who is not an artist. And this would be illegal in a one family residential district. Since most artists need to use the facilities like anyone else, and since Southampton allows detached buildings to be used as studios, many artists have moved to that town, in spite of the fact that the natural light in the community of Springs is astonishing, unlike the natural light in other parts of the Hamptons — a phenomenon that has frequently been commented upon.

CHEERIO. HERE'S A STORY FOR YOU LUV

By Dan Rattiner

One of the more wonderful things about publishing a seasonal newspaper is that there is a slow season. The summer is a general madness of activity. But the winter is a time for reflection. And travel.

I've done a lot of it in the last 45 years. For a long time, particularly in the beginning when the newspaper was small, I would go away for three and a half months. More recently, I would go away for just three weeks. As a newspaperman I sometimes imagine myself a spy or at least a foreign correspondent. I've lurked around in the old Soviet Union, in Cuba, in East Germany. I've been to New Zealand and I've lived in the Canary Islands for four months. I've heard gunfire and had shrapnel from a bomb rain down on a roof I was under in Guatemala.

This article is being written aboard an airplane flying from London to South Africa. It is late March 2006. This will be the first time I have ever been to Africa.

I'll be writing occasional stories from Africa, but for the moment I want to write about a very interesting phenomenon that has nothing to do with Africa. It's about what happened during our getting here.

To get to Africa, we flew JFK to London. Then London to Johannesburg. It's 6 hours to London, then 11 to Johannesburg, but I worked it out so we could fly all night and land in London at 9 a.m., then fly all night the next night and land in Johannesburg at 10 a.m. In between, we'd get to spend an entire day in London.

I'll tell you about our day in London. We walked about three miles, from Sloan Square to the Palace to Parliament. We had a spot of lunch in Sloan Square at one of the private clubs there. I had this brilliant idea, about

I can tell you with some disappointment that the current thinking of the Town of East Hampton has nothing to do with removing this restriction. They are talking about passing laws that would require artist's studios that are no longer being used by artists to be torn down.

I think a far more imaginative approach to this problem should be considered. Here is my suggestion. I believe that laws should be changed so that bathrooms can be installed in artist's studios in East Hampton. I think all artist studios should be licensed for one year, and that license should be renewed with documentation that the artist using it shows in a gallery (not a store with pictures on the walls and not a restaurant with pictures on the walls.) As this use is intended for the creation of the purer forms of art, which is what this area is known for, I would limit applications to only those who either paint or sculpt. Furthermore, I would require those applying for the studio use to agree to have one inspection between three and six months after the license is issued, so the building department can see the applicant is using it for the purpose it is intended. I would also require that the artist be the owner or renter of the entire premises.

What happens after the artist leaves? The bathroom would have to be removed and the applicant for the studio agrees to allow, at least once a year, an inspector to see the premises for the next ten years to make sure that this rule continues to be complied with.

You might ask about artists who cannot afford to rent an entire property and whether they might be eligible to apply for such a premises. I think they should. I think we should encourage people to have studios to do painting or sculpture. I would allow the owners of the property to charge a rent equal to exactly what it would cost monthly to pay a twenty-year mortgage. And I would allow an additional rent to be charged equal to the cost of providing repairs, metered utilities, and light and heat for the facilities. But I would not allow a rent to be charged greater than that, by agreement in the application.

The owner could amortize the building on his income taxes, which would be one benefit that might induce him to build such a project. And there would always be the possibility that these rules might be changed sometime in the future.

The town has been toying with the idea, as you know, of allowing separate facilities on single residence properties for the purpose of providing inexpensive housing for low income people who otherwise cannot afford to live here anymore because of the skyrocketing real estate prices. Whether these studios, at a future time, could be used for such purposes is not quite on the table at this particular time, but maybe in ten years it will be. Who knows? Times change. Perhaps it would not be necessary for such a thing, but if it were deemed a good idea, these buildings, with this low rent precedent, would already be in place for those who were not painters or sculptors.

So all this is my opinion, anyway.

A Pill to Give You an Uncontrollable Urge to Gamble & Other Stories

By Dan Rattiner

Ever since it was discovered five years ago that a drug intended to help people with blood pressure problems has an interesting side effect in males, an erection, scientists have been looking for all sorts of other connections between drugs and reactions. Most of it seems to originate in the brain.

For example, two months ago, it was found that a medicine developed to combat Parkinson's disease causes an uncontrollable urge for gambling. That's right, taking the drug Mirapex can cause gambling. The finding is documented in the latest issue of the publication Archives of Neurology. Believe it.

Before we move on to some of these studies, I think you are probably entitled to the full story about Mirapex and Parkinson's. The connection was noticed first by a Dr. Roger Kurlan, a professor of Neurology at the University of Rochester. It was occurring in several of his patients. One of them, who had been on Mirapex for just under a year, was a perfectly fine school administrator in his 40s who, seemingly possessed by an uncontrollable urge, wiped out not only his own savings, but his mother's pension by going gambling — an activity he had never done before. He also lost his job, and his marriage started to crumble. But then Dr. Kurlan, who saw similar behavior from another of his patients, took him off Mirapex. The behavior stopped. But he had gone through $350,000.

"The drug shows up more and more often in patients with these new gambling problems," said Dr. M. Leann Dodd at the Mayo Clinic in Minnesota.

"Patients need to talk to doctors and doctors need to talk to patients about this connection," Dr. Kurlan said.

There have been studies involving seeing. In one study, conducted at Rice University in Houston, volunteers were temporarily blinded by the application of magnetic pulses applied

DOLLARS, EUROS, PESOS & HAMPTONS SAND

By David Lion Rattiner

Not too many people in the world would have thought that sand could become a valuable natural resource. After all, there is sand every place you look. You can literally reach down into the ground and pick it up with your hands. It's not something that is scarce, like gold or silver. But out here in the Hamptons, sand is the new gold.

Because of erosion, sand is quickly becoming a very serious commodity for the Hamptons involving some serious money. Water front property owners want to have their beach for the summer and they are willing to pay for it, by the cubic yard. Replenishing the beaches by dumping sand onto them is not a new idea; it just simply has not been needed for many property owners. However, very slowly, water front home owners are seeing the effects of erosion on their property and want sand to get dumped out in front of their homes as quickly as possible. But where are they going to get it? What is it going to sell for? And will the market drive up the prices?

A local company called Patrick Bistran Jr. Inc. has been in the rock and sand business for a long time in East Hampton. The company owns several out of sight locations where digging takes place for various rocks and sand for driveways, landscaping and more recently, sand for oceanfront.

Getting the sand is tricky. There are a couple of options that you can do if you are in the sand business. One thing you can do is purchase it out of state and have it brought in by the truckload. This is a costly thing to do, however.

Another thing you can do is dig it out of the ground on your own property. This has problems, too, because the good sand, the stuff that feels good between your toes when you walk on it, usually has to come from the beach. This is by electrodes to the visual cortex in the back of the brain. (Don't ask.) During the period they were temporarily blinded, a computer screen in front of them flashed with a vertical line or a horizontal line. The pulses were stopped, the volunteers' sight was restored, and then they were asked which way the line on the screen went. One would expect a 50% correlation. Instead, it was around 80%. And from this, they have concluded that when blind, the brain "sees" anyway, but through some other sense.

"These findings demonstrate that while certain brain areas are necessary for awareness, there is extensive processing of information that takes place in a person's unconscious," said Tony Ro, a psychology professor at the school.

Some scientists in Seattle at the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center got sidetracked while watching people on television engaging in what might be called Daredevil activities. Why would anyone do these crazy things? They traced it to the brain — not to drugs but to genes.

Studying mice, they found that a mouse with two sets of a particular gene called neuroD2 behaved far more recklessly than did mice with one set of these genes. Who knew? They were able to determine that these genes contribute a sense of strong emotion and memory, and with it a desire to be reckless in order to experience such emotion and memory. If you have two sets of the genes, look out. This would explain Evil Kneival.

Another study involves the difference between men and women. At Stanford, a team led by Dr. Allan Reiss hooked up wires to the heads of 10 men and 10 women and one at a time, told them a series of jokes. It was found that the women used a far more analytic part of the brain than the men did. The women were working hard to fully understand what was being said —and when they got to the punch line and realized how funny it was —they really enjoyed it.

Men, on the other hand, just kind of poked along while being told the joke. They liked the punch line, but it wasn't a surprise. They knew they were being told a joke.

The conclusion was that men like slapstick and one-liners more, while women like long, shaggy dog jokes more. Who knew?

Why do certain drugs elicit odd smells? Nothing smells except to the person who took the drugs. Vanilla. Wet dog. Flowers. This was a very big deal in a terrorist alert in New York City two months ago —making front-page headlines in the daily papers —about a smell that descended upon the entire city for about three hours that everybody thought was French toast. Serious investigations ensued. Nobody ever found out what it was.

Later that day, I was on a Hampton Jitney going down Lexington Avenue on its way to the tunnel and the East End when the entire avenue became inundated with what appeared to be bird feathers. They wafted slowly down. And they wafted all the way down from 79th Street to 42nd Street. What the hell.....?

Scientists have found a drug that reverses a certain kind of blindness. The drug, Lucentis, reverses a blindness prevalent in the aged called macular degeneration. Speaking at a meeting of eye specialists in Montreal, Dr.

Local Art Group Finds Loophole to Preserve Sag Harbor Gas Ball

By David Lion Rattiner

Some have called Sag Harbor the Epcot Center of the Hamptons because of the large gas ball owned by KeySpan that is located by the post office. Next week, a plan to tear down the ball is set to go into effect, but a small group of artists may stop the demolition. A team of artists, all of whom hail from the East End, are going to do everything that they can to stop its removal by KeySpan. Their plan is to turn it into a giant art sculpture.

The team of artists, which includes three sculptors and two painters, plans on constructing a large to-scale basketball hoop, complete with a backboard and net around the gas ball, which they intend to paint to look like a basketball.

"It is a pretty simple idea really and it will look really neat," says Lake Gerpenskus, a sculptor from Sag Harbor who is on the team of artists. "Our team is going to create the largest basketball sculpture in the world if the town lets us do it. I don't see why they need to knock down this ball. Just take the gas out of it and turn it into something that we all can be proud of."

KeySpan maintenance crews have already set in motion the plans for the gas ball's removal, however, the artists and sculptors are not too late according to a village official. KeySpan has already spray painted guidelines up and down the ball so that the dismantling team can know where to cut with a blowtorch. The construction foreman, Dave Thebner, said that in about a week from the time this article goes to print, the dismantling team will begin to take down the ball.

"We don't want that to happen," says Lake. He might be on to something. Apparently, est to receive it?"

Apparently, the person that filled out the variance became confused when reading the line and ended up checking the "No" box when they meant to check the "Yes" box. It's a double negative. No means, they do in fact wish to donate the construction to an organization that has expressed written interest in it.

"When I saw them painting on those guides, I immediately thought to myself that the gas ball would look great if it was turned into a large basketball sculpture. So I wrote the town a letter not really thinking that it was something that I could actually do. I was surprised to get a letter in the mail last week saying that KeySpan was going to donate the ball to the art community from the town. I immediately called all of my sculptor and artist friends to tell them about the news," says Lake.

Lawyers for KeySpan have already said that they do not intend to give the ball to Lake, but that hasn't stopped Lake from gathering a group of lawyers of his own to say that they have to. After all, a checkbox was checked, a document was signed. This does not appear to be going down without a fight.

"If I can turn that thing into a basketball,

We have been seeing letters expressing interest in turning it into a giant eight ball, a golf ball and even a baseball.

this artist has been able to find a loophole in the village's large construction dismantling variance big enough to swish a basketball through. The variance involves an application which has to be filled out by whoever owns the construction and wants to tear it down. But it has a line in the document that says, "Do you not wish to donate your deconstruction to an organization that has expressed written inter-tive; I never knew anyone to hit anything with a .45 unless he shoved it in his opponent's mouth. But, oh boy, let me tell you that out at Sag Harbor I have a 10-gauge starting cannon that fires black powder blanks. One day, just to test it, I wadded in a handful of buckshot and got behind a tree to pull the string just in case it should explode. At fifty yards it made a pattern that would bring down a squad. It is just an idea, but I believe that the scattergun has a very definite psychological effect. A twig will deflect a rifle bullet but not a charge of buck.

"My third idea has been bugging me for some time. I think the most terrifying modern weapon is the napalm bomb. People who will charge rifle fire won't go through flame. The hand grenade is pretty good, but the necessary weight of metal for fragmenting makes it hard to throw and limits its range. Did you ever throw one with a bent arm? It will put your shoulder out for a week.

"What I suggest is a napalm grenade, packed in a heavy plastic sphere almost the exact size and weight of a baseball. The detonator should be of very low power – just enough to break the plastic shell and ignite the inflammable. If the napalm is packed under pressure, it will spread itself when the case breaks. The detonator (a contact cap) should be carried separately and inserted or screwed in just before throwing. This would allow a man to carry a sack full of balls without danger to himself. Now, we probably have developed some fine riflemen, sharpshooters, etc., but there isn't an American boy over thirteen who can't peg a baseball from infield to home plate with accuracy. And a grown man with sandlot experience can do much better. It is the natural weapon for Americans. Six good men could ring an area with either napalm or white phosphorus faster than you could throw a magazine into an automatic or a machine gun. And an enemy with a bit of flame on his clothes or even in front of him is out of combat. This weapon would also be valuable for cleaning out tunnels and foxholes. Mounted as a rifle grenade, the Steinbeck super ball would also be valuable for burning off cover of extra ambush country or of tree-borne sniper fire."

Nightlife Gets Hit in Quogue, Hampton Bays, North Sea & East Hampton

By Julia Nasser

If Southampton Town gets its way and nightclub owner Joseph Hennington gets his price, it might be the closing time for the Neptune Beach Club in Hampton Bays. The local haunt is the last oceanfront nightclub in the Hamptons and a historical landmark. The structure is one of the few remaining original coast guard stations built at the turn of the century, serving a life-saving purpose, where men watched for whales and clunky cargo ships. And believe it or not, the club is one of the few places where dancing is legal on the East End, based on dance hall laws issued years ago, which are a subject of debate among local officials.

With money from the Community Preservation Fund, Southampton Town hopes to purchase the three-acre lot just off Tiana Beach, restore the historical landmark to its former glory and create parkland. This is part of an ongoing project begun in 1991 that has preserved numerous plots and historical landmarks by purchasing clubs and businesses from private owners with the fund.

Besides its historical significance, many believe the nightclub to be a negative force in Hampton Bays. Town Councilman Steve Kenny claims the place has outlived its uses in the town and that it drains the town's resources. He refers to summer months, when police cruisers do laps around a bustling Dune Road and noise complaints pour in.

While Neptune has been a desirable property for the Town and preservationist promoters, it was actually the owner of eighteen years, Hennington, who approached the officials years ago upon learning of their desire for oceanfront property. As he reminds us, "everything is for sale" for the right price, a loaded statement in a market with asking prices in the eight digits arena. In fact, a new record was set when a home hit the market last week with a $60 million price tag. The

GIVE ME YOUR TIRED, YOUR POOR, YEARNING

By David Stoll

We live in a nation of immigrants. Almost every single citizen of the United States of America descends from immigrants. Our Nation is a beacon of hope and opportunity, a shining city on the hill. Yet, despite Tocquille's observation that "America is great because America is good," from time to time in our nation's history, we have witnessed impulses to close the borders. We are in one of these periods today, and the Hamptons proves no exception.

As in many southern border towns, here in the Hamptons we have a growing Latino population. These immigrants, looking for a better life for themselves and their children, seek work building our homes, mowing our lawns, cleaning our houses and manicuring our nails. As is usually the case, low-skilled immigrants are only too happy to perform the jobs that our own citizens don't want. For example, does anyone seriously contend that the day workers at the 7-Eleven in Southampton are taking jobs away from our brothers or children?

Yet, the 7-Eleven workers find themselves at the center of a controversy that very much mirrors the debates playing out in Washington D.C. and other areas of the country.

Southampton Village Mayor Mark Epley and the Southampton Village police department are trying to find a way to rid the 7-Eleven parking lot of these workers. Discussions range from finding a dedicated "hiring hall" for them to placing surveillance cameras at the parking lot.

Before people scream George Orwell, Police Chief Lars King contends that the camera idea is in very early stages and may never take off. On the other hand, in an effort to make the proposal seem less focused on day workers, he also tells us that cameras would be placed at Town cannot pay above the market value determined by an appraiser.

The issue has left local party-lovers feeling resistant. The historical significance that has piqued the interest of officials year after year, along with its natural beauty and "parkland potential," which also fuels the preservationist sentiment, are the same assets club frequenters are sad to lose.

The club, which has been a fundamental part of the scene since the 60s, also seems a dying breed out here. It's a down to earth and casual nightclub with a multi-level outdoor deck overlooking the frothy Atlantic. A place perched right on the beach with daily specials such as "Siesta Day" or "Get Twisted" and numerous daytime parties, live music and quirky events. On the website, amid the countless pictures of handsome sun-kissed people in surf trunks and flip flops, is a leftover message from last summer telling what it's all about at Neptune. It reads, "Thank you skydivers for landing safely."

This is far from the polished and ritzy atmosphere you'll find on any given night at those spots enjoyed by scenesters and marked by that elusive quality known as "high-end people." There, where posh Hamptonites and the Gotti girls of the world, along with celebrity gawkers, a-listers and everyone else, converges.

After bumper to bumper traffic, two hour lines outside, and a steep cover charge, and to then pile 2000-deep into an over-air conditioned club where the price of a beer (if you're lucky or aggressive enough to score one) would buy a six pack at the Hess Station, is not fun for some people, believe it or not. It's overcrowded, high anxiety and sure to drive many to tantrums on July 4th weekend.

While the deal is not sealed about Neptune, what seems certain is a pervasive trend out here as hotspots are replaced by lots, parkland, campgrounds and commercial buildings. Conscience Point is shuttered and boarded up. With CPF money, the town bought it for $3 million and turned the site into boat storage and public docking. The Hampton Beach Club, also on Tiana Beach, sold for $4 million in 2004. The CPF is considering two oceanfront campgrounds on town-owned land on Dune Road in the Summer Beach property and Hot Dog Beach in East Quogue. The land would be part of a proposed Coastal Heritage Trail, which would run from Westhampton Dunes and over the Shinnecock Canal with a maritime center and 60-foot replica of the Shinnecock lighthouse and an ecological center where visitors could study the cycles of the barrier beach. Resort night club in East Hampton has announced its plans to convert into office space, and was one of only two legal dance halls in East Hampton.

Another issue comes to mind concerning Neptune's demise. Most of the live music performed in East Hampton is illegal and so is dancing in most establishments, any bar or restaurant that lacks a dance hall permit, in fact. In the town of East Hampton only two places, Resort and The Star room, have dance hall permits. There is talk of higher fines for noise ordinance violations and stricter enforcement for new establishments, which would mean a dance and live music spot would have a lot of hoops to jump through in order to exist. Though the law isn't enforced out here, there is talk of stricter enforcement so the question remains: will we soon be living in the real life version of Footloose? Will those who are prone towards accidental hip swaying be asked to stand still and politely escorted out the door?

a problem because that is exactly the location that you want to add it to. You can dig for it inland, but the sand is not as good and is less sought-after than the legitimate beach sand. You don't want that fake, Las Vegas type sand running around your oceanfront home. You want the real thing, from the beach itself.

Because of this desire, there is also another way you can get sand if you are in the sand business. You can dig it up from one spot on the coast where there is a lot of sand, put it all in a truck and then bring it to the spot where there isn't so much sand. Then you got the real thing. You're just sort of spreading it out along the coast. Kind of like spreading out a clump of butter on a piece of toast.

Well, this is exactly what the Patrick Bistrian Jr. Company did last week. The clever company made a deal with East Hampton town to dig up some unwanted sand in East Hampton that stretches along Gerard Drive. This is where Kim Cattrall has a house. The large shoal of sand was formed by a series of northeast storms over the winter and poses a danger to boaters in the area. The town went to the sandman (Bistrian) and wanted to hire him to remove the sand. Instead of asking for money from the town however, Bistrian Inc. simply wanted to keep the sand and then sell it. The town agreed because they would save money and Bistrian agreed because he would make more money by selling it.

It was estimated that in the course of one day, 3,000 cubic yards of sand were removed from the spot on Gerard Drive. Bistrian can sell the sand for $22 bucks a cubic yard. This price can change a little bit depending on the quality of the sand, but this is the best estimate we have been able to find. Using the $22 means that you can make quite a score selling sand. In this case it is $66,000 for a day's worth of work. The sand business is big business.

The market, like almost everything else, does drive the price of sand, and the law of economics says that the scarcer something gets, the more valuable it becomes. This means that if the ocean continues to eat away at the coast, less sand will be available and more sand will be needed, which means that the price of sand will continue to go up. We have one of those kaching situations going on here for ambitious sand tycoons.

Maybe one day we'll see cubic yards of sand traded on the commodities markets just like gold, silver and oil. Maybe we'll start importing sand from the Middle East. You just never know. It may sound far fetched, but there are a lot of market movers and shakers in the Hamptons.

I'm going to," says Lake.

Now that the news of the variance checkbox mishap is out, several other artists from the East End have written letters of inquiry about the gas ball. "We have been seeing letters expressing interest in turning it into a giant eight ball, a golf ball and even a baseball. The letters are just pouring into the office," says a village official.

Meanwhile, the potential dismantling of the gas ball has many boaters that frequent Sag Harbor upset because so many of them use the gas ball as a visual landmark. "I can see that ball from my sailboat five miles away. Now how am I supposed to know that I am in Sag Harbor?" says Gene Allan, a yachtsman that visits Sag Harbor yearly.

Lake has said that he intends on working with KeySpan as best he can so that both parties can be happy. "Ideally, I want them to remove all of the environmental issues that the gas ball brings before my team and I start painting it."

What Can You Buy in the Hamptons for $40 Million? That's Easy.

By Christian McLean

You've just won the lottery, or the Hamptons equivalent, —your trust fund/divorce settlement just kicked in, and now you've got $40 million burning a hole in your pocket. You've tried to stuff it under your bed, you've tried hiding it in the coffee can in the back of the fridge, and you've even tried your hand at stocks, but all that is just too boring for you. So what can you actually buy for $40 million in the Hamptons?

It seems like a silly question, because practically anywhere else in the country the answer is "Anything you want." Here, it's not so. With forty mil. lying about, you're still not going to be able to afford the highest-end houses on the market. You can make an offer on Andy Warhol's digs in Montauk, but they'll probably shake their heads. You could try Three Pond Farm and they'll laugh you right off the $70 million property (watch out for the bunker on the sixth hole, it's a doozy).

It seems forty big ones don't really get you what they used to east of the canal. Maybe $40 million is the new $20 million, white's the new black, up's the new down, North of the Highway is the new South of the Highway (just kidding), and all those "Tycoons" under $50 million just aren't the players they used to be. So what can forty million get you these days, after all? Well, I liquidated all my assets to find out. During the study I sat with a calculator, crunching numbers to find out how you or I could spend that hard earned or legally designated money. First things first, I'm gonna need a place to sleep at night. Bayfront, oceanfront or woods, and in what village? Well, I picked up a few Dan's Papers from the last few weeks and went to work trying to figure out where to rest my, and 20 of my closest friends', heads. (With $40 million, I'm pretty beds? Hmmm. Maybe ocean isn't for me. Either that or just get rid of the friends. There's a plot on Further Lane in East Hampton that is $19.5 million, but they haven't built the house yet. I think it's still in construction. Well, how am I supposed to live there this summer if there isn't a house? I could buy 231 Classic 34 SO Airstream trailer at $88,473 a pop. They're rather trailer trash-chic these days. Maybe I could have Ralph Lauren design the interiors?

Those run about $100,000 each, but hey, it's for charity, right? Then again, someone would start complaining that they've gone blind from the glare of the campers' stainless steel bodies. Then I'd get sued and have to pay the lawyers about $40 million to settle the case.

You know what? I'm looking at this in the wrong way. I'll buy little houses throughout the Hamptons so I'll never be more than fifteen minutes away from a nice July afternoon nap. Okay, an eight bedroom estate in Quogue at $5 million, Rose Hill Road in Southampton at $6.75 million, Bridgehampton on Kellis Pond for $4.5 million, Noyac Bay waterfront in Sag Harbor at $3.3 million, Amagansett on a dune for $4.8 million, a hilltop equestrian compound in Montauk for $5.5 million, and hell, why not The Ram's Head Inn on

sure I can afford at least 20 friends.)

If I'm just looking for one piece of property that will get me close enough to $40 million and still leave me with some bucks to pay the taxes, dine out and maybe pick up some new wheels, there's a joint in Southampton. Give me Ocean with a capital O. Almost 5 acres, on a "coveted lane" at $31 million. Not bad, but only five bedrooms, where are my friends gonna stay? Bunk

review: "johnny cash"

By Debbie Tuma

The first time I saw Johnny Cash was on the stage of my college auditorium in upstate New York during the 1970s and he was singing his new hit song, "A Boy Named Sue." I later had the privilege of meeting his daughter, singer Roseann Cash, at a benefit for a gun control group at a private party in Bridgehampton about five years ago. She sang a country song, and, like her Dad, could belt it out with soul. She was also accompanied at this event, by her fellow gun control activist and friend, Richard Gere, and his wife Carrie Lowell.

I remember thinking that it was cool to see Roseann Cash in the Hamptons. You'd expect to be seeing her maybe in some place like Nashville or Memphis, but here she was, in the potato fields of Bridgehampton, where she often visits friends. And she had talked about her Dad, how close they were and how much she had admired him..

The second time I saw Johnny Cash was last Thursday night at the Southampton Publick House. Well, it was almost like seeing him again, 30 years later, except that the "man in black" on this stage was doing a mighty good imitation of the late singer. When Rob Ryan, with his curly dark hair and sideburns, picked up his acoustic guitar and swung it over singing "Jackson," who knew he was a Johnny Cash impersonator from Manhattan? Dressed completely in black, from his shirt to his pants to his Cuban shoes, he was accompanied this evening by a June Carter impersonator, Hilary Hawke of Brooklyn, who sang and played the banjo. Both Ryan and Hawke work for "That's Entertainment," of Centereach, taking their act on the road around Long Island and the New York Metro area.

At the Publick House on this night, about 170 people packed into the room to see "Johnny Cash" and "June Carter" at this year's benefit for the Dominican Sisters, the non-profit organization that provides home health care services for people throughout Suffolk County and has offices in East Hampton, Hampton Bays, and Medford.

Pamela Ash, Suffolk County Administrator of the Dominican Sisters, said the proceeds of the event would go to their Interfaith Volunteer Program, where volunteers drive clients without transportation to medical appointments and also visit patients in need. She said her group decided to have a Johnny Cash impersonator after the popularity of the movie, Walk the Line.

"Also, after having an Elvis impersonator for the past three years, we wanted to try someone different," said Mary Ann Bogannam, Development Coordinator of the Dominican Sisters, who organized this event. "We thought Johnny Cash might create some excitement."

The crowds initially had to wait about 45 minutes for the entertainment to begin, since "Johnny and June" got held up in rush hour traffic on the Long Island Expressway.

"Johnny Cash is lost on the LIE," people were whispering, when this reporter walked into the party at 6 p.m. By about 6:45 p.m., they were making their way through the crowd, and a hush fell as the tall man in black walked up to the microphone and announced, "Hello, I'm Johnny Cash. Are there any hillbilly enthusiasts out there?" By the time they started singing such crowd-pleasers as "Walk the Line" and "Ring of Fire," everyone had forgotten about the time and started moving to the music.

It was evident that there were a lot of die-hard Cash and country western fans in the room. Some, like Evelyn Donnelly of East Hampton, had even dressed the part. Wearing her wide-brimmed cowgirl hat and cowgirl boots, she said, "I'm really into country music, can't you tell? I play it all the time on the radio. I'm also a big fan of Johnny Cash."

Lori Hubbard said, "I came all the way from Montauk to see 'Johnny Cash' — his was the first concert I ever went to, during the late 1970s."

Another woman from Bridgehampton, who would only say her name was Margo, recalled, "I was a groupie back in the 1970s, and I almost slept with Johnny Cash. He was very sweet, and we went out a few times."

Former Southampton Councilman Jim Drew, who's on the board of Dominican Sisters, said, "People are hooting and hollering, so I think it's a good tribute to Cash and country western music."

Emily Raynor and Joe Bedell could relate to the romantic connection between Johnny Cash and his wife, June Carter Cash. "We both have birthdays coming up soon, so this evening was a gift to us both from friends, and we're getting married on May 20," said Bedell.

During their break, Hilary Hawke said she also plays with her own band called Hoss and Rob Ryan said that he has performed in Nashville with Charlie Daniels and Jerry Jeff Walker. When asked why he wanted to impersonate Johnny Cash, he said, "He was one of our true American icons, and one of our greatest poets. His music and words really stood the test of time, and his appeal was to all audiences, young and old, till the day he died."

Another fan in the crowd, Paul Puchala of East Quogue, said as much as he enjoyed the Cash tribute, "Next year, I hope they get Dolly Parton."

Nathan Lane is one of those actors who reclaims that old-world Broadway feel. It's interesting, considering the fact that he is of this generation, born in 1956. But there is something timeless about his persona, something pure and unfettered about his delivery. Perhaps it's the down-home Jersey boy in him. Nathan was born in Jersey City as Joseph Lane. His father was a truck-driver and an aspiring singer. He was the youngest of three brothers. His oldest brother Dan got him his first acting role when Joseph (Nathan) was still in elementary school. He got his first big laugh in 6th grade in a production of Around the World in 80 Days, when he fell in love with the stage.

"I fell in love with the whole ritual," he recalled. "The lights going down, the curtain going up, telling a story to a large group of people in the dark. It was one of those moments where you think, 'I can do that.' You're in control on stage. And I love telling the whole story in one fell swoop."

When Joe Lane graduated from high school (after being voted best actor by his classmates), he started working at the County Clerk's office. He also held such jobs as a singing messenger and a stand-up comic. I cannot imagine a better birthday greeting than Nathan Lane at your front door with a melodic message, but I guess the world had yet to discover his value.

When Joe was 22 years old, he decided to join the Actor's Guild. But another Joseph Lane was already a member, so he had to think of another name. Joe chose the name Nathan as homage to Nathan Detroit, his favorite character from the Broadway classic Guys and Dolls.

Nathan Lane spent the 1980s building his acting experience on both stage and screen. He made his film debut in 1987 in Ironweed, starring Hollywood heavyweights Jack Nicholson and Meryl Streep. He played a lot of secondary film roles throughout the decade, but onstage, the spotlight was on him in shows like Guys and Dolls. In 1992, he took on the role of Nathan Detroit, the character he had always admired, and won respect from audiences.

In the early 90s, Lane played an opera queen in The Lisbon Traviata, and he won a drama desk award for his powerful portrayal of Buzz in Love! Valour! Compassion! Buzz is HIV-pos-ious half of the Timon and Pumba duo cast a humorous light on the struggle of young Simba, who sought refuge and acceptance with the nomadic pair. In 1996, Lane brought his stage appeal to the big screen in a tour de force performance in The Bird Cage. In this film, featuring an all-star cast of Robin Williams, Gene Hackman, Dianne Wiest, and Hank Azaria, Lane plays one-half of a flamboyant gay couple who is trying to "straighten up" to meet their son's conservative parents. At that point in his life, though, Lane was yet to publicly announce his sexual orientation. He felt uncomfortable discussing his personal life with complete strangers.

But in 1998, Lane realized, along with the rest of the public, that such silence might have its price. Following the tragic murder of Matthew Shepherd, Nathan Lane decided to share with the world that he was gay. He had not thought it anyone's business for a long time, but upon seeing the violence that can arise from ignorance, he thought it important to pave the way toward acceptance.

In 2001, Lane was able to bring his giant persona back to the stage when he starred opposite Matthew Broderick in The Producers on Broadway. This musical, produced and directed by Mel Brooks, won more Tony Awards than any other musical in history, and one of them went to our man, Nathan Lane. It was his second Tony in the category of "Best Actor," his first being in 1996 for his role in a revival of A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum. He was also nominated for a Tony for Best Actor in 1992 for his portrayal of Nathan Detroit in a revival of Guys and Dolls.

Nathan Lane went to London to reprise his role in the West End version of The Producers, but after a short time, his back began giving him problems and he had to withdraw a couple of weeks before his contract expired. He returned to the United States, and on January 9, 2006, he and co-star Matthew Broderick were awarded a joint star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame.

Nathan Lane has always been a strong advocate of theatre, devoting his time to such organizations as the American Theatre Wing. This group was formed at the beginning of World War I, when a group of women got together to figure out how to raise funds for war relief. Members of all aspects of theatre got together to work towards a common goal. The American Theatre Wing has continued in that tradition ever since. At this time, the "Working in the Theatre" series is one of the most prominent projects that the American Theatre Wing produces. Nathan Lane has, not surprisingly, appeared in this series.

TWENTYSOMETHING... By DAVID LION RATTINER

Latin Night

Sometimes you just feel like doing something different on a Saturday night. You have to switch it up a little to keep things interesting. Interesting was what I got at The Resort nightclub in East Hampton on Latin night, last Saturday. Tom, James and I went to see what this was all about.

With all of the talk in the town (and the country for that matter) about the issues regarding immigration in the United States, it seemed like an appropriate idea. The protest that happened along the Brooklyn Bridge also gave some inspiration for the adventure that evening.

Regarding the whole issue of immigration, which I feel is like the new political fad of the month, I have listened to just about everyone's opinion on it. Here's what I think. I think the Latinos that come into the country to work, better themselves, their family and their community are good. The Italians, Greeks, Irish and Germans did it. If you are reading this, my guess is that some part of your heritage is from these countries. I think that the money they earn should be taxed for schools, police and other good things. I think that overpopulation is scary, but think that it will always be an issue (similar to the way global warming will always be an issue). I think the idea of kicking everyone out is unrealistic and dangerous. Other countries that do this alienate an entire population and create a ground for crime and even terrorism. I don't think that it is possible to accomplish this, even if the harshest and most extreme form of laws were put in place. I think going about it in this way will do much more harm for all communities than good.

So anyway, back to clubbing on a Saturday night.

The three of us showed up at Resort pretty excited because there were a lot of cars parked there. "You see, I told you this was going to be cool," Tom said.

"We aren't going to understand any of the music," James said.

We walked up to the bouncers who checked our IDs and let us into the club. It quickly became clear that the three of us were probably the only white guys inside of this place. I've got to be honest, I felt a little uncomfortable. Latin music was blasting and there was a large group of people doing the salsa, or the meringue whatever it was. All I knew was that there was no way I was going to be able to swing a girl around the floor the way these Latin guys were.

I have never experienced being in the minority anywhere and I was feeling really weird inside. Was I offending people by being here? Was this a big deal? I scanned the room and found one other white guy. I was dreading, for the first time in my life, being a tall person. I needed to loosen up. I found a friend of mine, Danny, whom I knew from high school and who hails from Puerto Rico. I used to play football with him. I said hello. It was time to go grab a drink and enjoy myself.

I went over to the bar.

Now I want to be clear here. I always order a Corona when I am at a bar. It is my favorite beer. I like the way it tastes, I like the whole process of sinking the lime into the bottle and I like the summer aura that revolves around the marketing of the beer. However, the beer is a Mexican beer.

I didn't want to cause any trouble with anyone. If anything, I wanted to impress everyone that was here with my ability to be comfortable with myself in such an atmosphere. Was it a big deal to order a Corona on Latin night? Was this an insult? DAVE, FOR THE LOVE OF GOD, IT'S JUST A BEER! I took a deep breath, "Let me have three Coronas, please."

"Yes, sir," said the bartender.

Whew.

I looked around to see if anyone was giving me any looks, but I don't think anybody did. To be honest, I think it was all in my head, or most of it anyway. All the guys there were doing what every normal young guy does. They were scoping out the hot Latin girls, which, needless to say, there were a lot of.

Speaking of which, it came time to ask someone to dance the meringue. I have never done it, but I figured I'd give it a shot.

I don't want to brag, but I did do the meringue. Well, I did the lousy white guy dancer version. If you don't know this version, it involves slipping, stepping on your partner's toes and nearly knocking yourself out by hitting your head on a neighbor's head. Like I said, I don't want to brag.

Sheltered Islander #393 The Untuckables

The South Ferry has a new ticket system. The owner of the South Ferry is a sweetheart of a guy and all the staff is all really nice, but I don't know about this new ticket system...

It used to be that you exchanged money for a nice 3"x 4" postcard paper ticket with the date and your trip choices punched out. Now they're testing a new system, with a computerized handheld ticket machine that prints out a tissue thin ticket. I watched the ticket taker punch in the codes for a round trip and then use a separate little printer on his belt to print out the tiny 2" square ticket. It took longer for him to enter the codes and wait for the ticket to be printed than it used to take to hand over cash and get a torn off ticket with your change. What's going to happen when these little electronic machines gets hit with salt spray? Or are dropped? Not that either of those two things would happen on a ferry...

But here's the real problem.... the tiny tickets!

Everyone on Shelter Island has a specific spot where they tuck their ferry ticket. Most people tuck it above the driver's window where the frame joins the headliner. Some have elastic straps on their sun visors and tuck it there. Everybody has a spot and can ticket tuck by feel, in the dark, half asleep, while holding hot coffee, while arguing, anything, but the ticket has to be big enough and stiff enough to tuck.

These new small, flimsy ones are untuckable tickets. They wouldn't go in my usual spot, so I drove with one hand while I searched for alternative ticket tucking locations. I'm an experienced ticket tucker, but I couldn't secure this ticket anywhere. Plus, I could see that from my handling, the print — with my round trip fare on it — was smearing. It finally ended up in my wallet. Then I had to dig it out for the return trip.

But the problem is even bigger than that. You see, loose ferry tickets in the car serve a multitude of purposes in Island life. You can write a note on a ferry ticket and wedge it in someone's house door or car door, or leave it under the windshield wiper. If it's a long note, you can put a "1", "2", "3", at the top of each ticket. You could write a novel if you have enough tickets.

How many times have you seen short grocery lists on the back of tickets in the carts at IGA?

How many times have you, in desperation, used the corner of a ferry ticket as a toothpick?

How about writing an absence excuse on the back of a ticket for the school because the nice note you wrote is still on the kitchen table?

You can play three games of 'tic tac toe' with bored kids on the back of each ticket.

As you're driving and hear something on the radio you want to remember, you reach for a ferry ticket and pen and the ticket is just the right size to lay on the center of the steering wheel and write while you drive.

A ferry ticket can flatten and remove spiders from the car.

All of my bookmarks are ferry tickets.

I asked a fellow school mom for an easy recipe she mentioned. She gave it to me on the back of a ferry ticket while we were in the parking lot.

Ever get in your car and find a note written on a ferry ticket waiting for you on the dashboard?

Ever amuse yourself on the ferry by looking at the shapes of the punches?

The old tickets could survive rain or coffee spills, but not the new ones. Three rain drops and you will be handing the ticket taker a lump of mush for a return ticket.

I know there's no stopping progress. I know that computers make our lives better. I know that a computerized ticket is better for me than a tear off, I guess. I know all this, but I will sure miss those multipurpose ferry tickets.

Did I mention you can wallpaper with ferry tickets?

where we might lunch. I am a member of the Harvard Club of New York. And one of the perks of the Harvard Club is that they have reciprocal agreements with several old English clubs in London. When the members of those clubs are in Manhattan, they can pop by for a bite at our club. And so forth and so on.

Thus it was that we ate Scottish salmon and tap beer at one of these magnificent old 19th century clubs in Sloan Square — a dozen or more of them are assembled there so the members of one can go out for a bite with the members of another and so forth. And then we went off on our bit of a trek through the drizzle to the Queen and Number One Downing, where we got soaked through and through and just before the Parliament building, having come just one way from Sloan Square for this two hour trek, we took a taxi back to Paddington Station and then the tube to the airport. We had talked to many people. And as usual, my girl friend commented that it really was not necessary for me to talk like them. But I was talking like them, with my own version of a British accent. And now, on this plane, I have begun to write this story for the paper. And I have an alarming problem.

It is the strangest thing. The way I write is, I hear a voice talking to me in my head and then just transcribe down what it says on my laptop. It's a bit disconcerting because it isn't me, really, but I have been told that is what many writers do. In my case, I discovered, and you may have already noticed this, that the voice in my head was speaking in a very heavy upper class British accent and so what I was writing down was shot through with the sorts of blather the English upper class might say.

And so here I am, on this airplane trying to write this thing while overhead, a light has lit up and now the pilot is telling us we will be coming in to Johannesburg Airport for a landing shortly so we have to put our laptops and other gear away. Tallyho.

How long is this going to continue? And who, back across the pond, will want to read this ridiculous bother written by a phony Englishman in somebody's head? • on prohibition era laws called "The Cabaret Laws." The law is still in effect, which means owners can be fined, shut down and arrested if there are "three or more people moving in a synchronized fashion." And cops are still prowling the club circuit in search of — not underage drinkers, drugs or fights — dancing.

It almost seems too absurd to be true. Sounds like a Kafka story, or Brave New World or something. But not so long ago, club goers were known to stop the drum and bass music and stop still, right in their tracks, when the dance police arrive.

Are we to believe the Gatsby era party scene is calming down? That people are ready to avoid the traffic and spend some time with bare feet in the sand or on front lawn soirees instead? Will dancing be restricted?

It's possible, of course. All great Golden ages are followed by Depressions and conservative reactions.

But something tells me that the world of guest lists, all night dance parties and summertime indulgence is too interwoven with what this place has become. Clubs will go and more will open but while you can take the Hamptonite out of the party, you can't take the party out of the Hamptonite. And anyone familiar with Footloose knows that not even bible-belt finger shakers can keep the kids from dancing. Even still, Neptune's possible end is a real loss. One of those few special places with character, with history and good old unpolished fun that is a shame to see pass.

Perhaps in a few years no one will remember that once you were able to go out without your publicist, velvet ropes or bathroom attendants, and party in a t-shirt. But there will always be the Stephen Talkhouse.

Pharma (continued from page 22)

Joan Miller of the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary said that of 716 patients with macular degeneration taking Lucentis, almost half of the patients improved so much they achieved 20/40 vision tests, which would enable them to drive a car. The way the drug works is that blood vessels in the back of the eye which block vision actually reduce in size when the drug is taken over time. People can see again.

Finally it appears that we are getting somewhere in learning how drugs affect genetics, the brain and behavior.

I recently read an article in the New York Times about scientists who either insert or remove a gene in a particular animal, thus modifying its behavior.

Certain male fruit flies exhibit this elaborate courtship ritual when confronted with a female. But change a gene and they can be confronted with a female and just shrug their shoulders and walk away.

By switching a single gene in a prairie vole, they can change a doting, loving monogamous father into a promiscuous skirt chaser.

Some roundworms like to eat in herds. Others like to eat alone. Scientists can now switch a gene to get worms to do one or the other.

It's kind of sad, I think.

So it's time for a joke. Ready?

A man is driving along through the desert out west when his car starts making funny noises. He struggles along and finally makes it to a gas station, where the mechanic tells him he's going to have to order a part. It will take four days, so he better make himself at home.

"Where would I stay?" he asks.

"We've got a hotel over there. And a bar. You'll be all right."

He checks into the hotel and goes to the bar, which is jumping with activity. After a while, he notices something. Everyone in the bar is a man.

He asks someone about it.

"Where are the women?" he asks.

"We don't have any women," is the reply.

"But what do you do for, you know?"

"Well, we've got the animals."

"You have sex with animals?"

"Oh, you get used to it."

"That's disgusting."

He goes to bed that night, and then next day is back at the bar. Two days later, the mechanic tells him there will be a delay of an extra day because they had trouble finding the part. The next night comes and the next morning and he can't stand it anymore and he goes out and finds himself a pig.

After he's satisfied himself, he returns to the bar where he notices that everybody is staring at him.

"What?" he says. "Hey, you said it was okay with animals."

"Yeah," says the bartender, "but NOBODY f---s the Sheriff's wife." •

BUD TOPPING, 77

Warren Gilbert Topping, known from childhood as Bud, passed away in his sleep, at home, Friday, March 31st, 2006.

A potato farmer known for his calm strength, handsome grace, generosity in helping others, and his unusual way with words, he went on to develop and maintain the beautiful grounds of the Topping Horse Farm and the Hampton Classic Horse Show; known throughout the world as the most beautiful of its kind. Bud Topping lived his whole life in two houses in Sagaponack, first with his father and mother, Warren and Helen, and his brother, Alvin, on Sagg Main, and then, after marrying Tinka Derecktor, in the barn they turned into a home, just yards away on Daniel's Lane.

Bud Topping was a legend in Sagaponack and the East End, one of the last of a generation of farmers whose lives were tied to the land and the ocean they loved so deeply. Every time a new house went up on Daniel's Lane, or a larger, fancier car drove by he made a characteristic disparaging gesture or comment. Strangers and friends alike called on Bud in storms, in illness, or when the grass wasn't growing right. When someone had a problem the refrain in Sagaponack was, "Ask Bud."

At a celebration of his life in his vegetable garden at his home in Sagaponack on Sunday, April 2nd, 2006, close to 200 friends, including those who had known him all his life, declared the brilliant breezy sunshine a "Bud Day." Members of his family and three intimate, forever, friends spoke. One after another referred to his uncanny ability to zero in on a name that captured the essence of a person. Nicknames like Woodchuck, Spider Man, and Sea Otter were just a few. Old and new friends shared stories of farming, iceboating, fishing, always with a twist. His daughter, Jenno Topping, told of numerous close calls with equipment, vehicles, and interlopers who had no idea what they were up against. His nephew, Jagger Topping, described Bud's stories of "the olden days" and explained that Bud showed how proximity to a red tractor can allure beautiful girls. His granddaughters, Ella and Jaja, spoke about his story of first seeing his wife, Tinka, in a convertible with her blonde hair flowing. His 12-year-old grandson, Sam, summed up Bud's gift for language when he said after cutting the field for him, "Honey shook my hand and said 'good job Reverend.'"

Bud Topping's life revolved around his farm and his family. He leaves his wife of 43 years, Tinka; their four children, Jenno, Susan, Tim, and Kathy; their partners, Chris, Tom, Jon and Elizabeth; and ten grandchildren, Jake, Will, Sam, Ella, Jaja, Jasper, Gavin, Ruby, Maddie, and Charlie.

His longtime friend Tom Halsey said, "Everybody's got to go sometime, but there are some people you think will live forever." Another childhood friend, Lee Foster, who reminded those gathered that his old-time Sagaponack name was Plant, said a big chunk of Sagaponack is gone.

Donations in honor of Bud Topping can be made to the Peconic Land Trust, Box 1776, Southampton, NY 11969 or at www.peconiclandtrust.org. For more information, call Tinka Topping, (631)537-0941.

Shelter Island for $10.5 million — might as well make some money while I'm spending it.

Then again there's always living on a boat. I like Sag Harbor. Maybe I'll give the folks at the internationally based Edmiston yacht construction company a ring. They've got the Sahara Explorer Project up for sale at $35 million. At 92.4 meters long and housing ten guest suites, it's sure to make a splash. It may not be in the Hamptons yet, but I'm positive I could get it docked outside B. Smith's by the time summer rolls along. It's even got a helicopter pad, which is great because for another two million, I'll pick up one of them, too.

Say you already have a house. What else will $40 million get us? You'll need a little something to hang on the walls of your home, right? I'm sure a quick stop at Vered, in East Hampton, will easily do away with the millions you've got tucked away in the Stuart Weitzman shoebox at the bottom of your closet. Otherwise, maybe you could make an offer on those Pollocks found in Wainscott. If real, they're estimated at around $35 million. While on the subject of the arts, there's always theatre. Please turn off your cell phones, make yourself comfortable and enjoy roughly 800,000 shows at Bay Street (Don't worry it's in walking distance from the yacht.)

Not concerned about putting on a few pounds and have a hankering for one hell of a cheeseburger? Try dining on 2,266,666 of them at Bobby Van's. I suggest going with the gorgonzola melted on top, it gives it a nice finish. Then again, you can combine the two and do dinner and a show.

Airplanes are too obvious. Everyone's got one of those now a days. But if you're interested, there's a 1971 CESSNA U206 for sale at the East Hampton airport. It's used and will run you about $110,000, plus hanger and insurance costs — pocket change. You can contact Henry Weiss on his Florida line at (954) 772-1000.

Same goes for cars, boring, although the new Bugatti, at $1.24 million, isn't such a bad idea.

You can spend the other $38.76 million on gas. It should be enough to get you from Southampton to Montauk and back.

To be honest, I'm sure there's a lot more we could find in the Hamptons for $40 million. And maybe I am wrong about 40 being the new 20. But none of it really matters: not the boats, the cars, the house, nothing, if you aren't enjoying yourself. As the old saying goes, money can't buy you happiness. Then again, you put me on a yacht with 2,266,666 Bobby Van's cheeseburgers dribbling Heinz 57 on a Pollock and see if there's a grin on my face.

P.S. You can also always donate $40 million to one of the many East End charities I recommend it.

other busy locations, too. One cannot imagine that Southampton residents will permit this to happen. It is not as though we are trying to prevent a terrorist attack at the Southampton movie theater.

To Mayor Epley's credit, he seems to be looking for a workable solution that permits the workers and people who need their services to meet, in a safe and legal way. While the issues relating to immigration are complex and often divisive, most people agree that the people here illegally should not be entitled to the jobs sought by legal immigrants. Controversial concepts such as creating guest worker programs or providing amnesty seek to re-define who is legally here, but however the definition ultimately is resolved, we understand that the law then needs to be enforced. The lack of enforcement frustrates many people.

Yet, is that what is behind today's arguments over the 7-Eleven workers? Yes, some of them, perhaps even most, might be here illegally, and that is a problem that needs to be addressed by the Federal government. But what of those here legally who are simply trying to make an honest day's living? What is our problem with them?

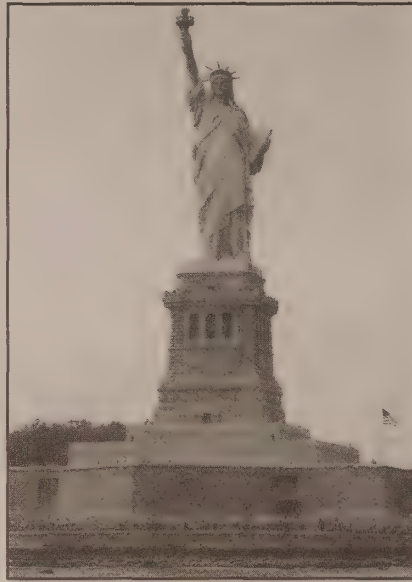

For some, the problem may be one of appearances and also feelings of safety. We exist in a rarefied world here in the Hamptons, and perhaps we do not want to be reminded of the underside of society when we are here. Isn't that what we are leaving behind when we exit New York City? Moreover, women in particular may feel threatened entering and leaving the 7-Eleven, even if the large groupings of men are not acting aggressively. These are legitimate concerns indeed, and Mayor Epley's idea of creating a hiring hall for the workers would address them. Plus, an organized hiring hall could allow us to ensure that only legal workers are hired.

But there seems to be more at play. Among some people, there is decidedly strong opposition to creating a hiring hall, certainly one bearing the imprimatur of the local government and paid for with tax dollars. These people, organized into an anti-immigration group and outrageously calling themselves "minutemen," are flexing whatever muscle they have to prevent the establishment of a hiring hall. They have met with Mayor Epley and have sought a meeting with Town Supervisor Patrick Heaney. The minutemen will stage protests at the 7-Eleven.

One member of this group has said that he feels that the nation is "under attack," apparently referring not to terrorists who wish to blow up buildings but to people seeking to grab on to the American Dream. It is not clear whether his concern is directed at Latino immigrants only or all immigrants, but whatever the motivation, anti-immigrant fervor in the Hamptons will affect the Latino community more than any other.

The local self-proclaimed minutemen are actually organized as a chapter of a larger organization called the Minutemen Civil Defense Corps. We should pause here to observe that describing themselves as minutemen is a complete perversion of history. Before Congress had authorized the formation of a Continental Army, to be commanded by George Washington, the States created special bands of elite fighters. These Minutemen, who were taken out of the State militias and regiments, stood on the front lines, always ready to defend against an attack. It was the Minutemen who were there at Lexington Green 231 years ago April 19.

While the Minutemen of history did defend the nascent nation against "attack," they did so as official creations of the States following the orders of their commanders, not as some vigilante group that is dissatisfied with the policy choices being made by the elected representatives of a free people.

To be fair, it is reasonable to worry about immigration policy and, particularly, to ask questions about how fast new groups of people can be assimilated into American culture at any one time. Such questions are made more difficult today because many of our institutions, including those of higher learning, are openly skeptical of American values and promote a dangerous brand of multiculturalism. And surely the Federal government can do a better job creating and implementing a coherent immigration policy.

But let us not forget our better natures. Let us not pull the ladder up from behind us. Let us not obstruct Mayor Epley's efforts to find a workable solution.

Lane (continued from page 33)

Recently, Nathan Lane resumed his comfortable position opposite Matthew Broderick. They starred in a revival of The Odd Couple on Broadway for the past few months. The show centers on a pair of mismatched roommates, one neat and polite, Felix Unger (Broderick), and the other sloppy and crude, Oscar Madison (Lane). The duo's famous compatibility received rave reviews on Broadway. This show ended April 2.

What's in store for this master of the stage and silver screen? His performances show no sign of waning in their force and enthusiasm. But as the spring coaxes the buds to open on Ocean Road, perhaps Nathan Lane will grant himself some time off for a decade well spent at his beach house in the East Hampton.

On Monday, April 10, 2006, the American Theatre Wing's annual Spring Gala will honor The Odd Couple stars Matthew Broderick and Nathan Lane for their creative achievements. The event will be held at Cipriani, at 110 East 42nd Street in New York City. The evening will begin with cocktails at 6:30 p.m., dinner at 7:30 p.m. and will feature an entertainment tribute to the stars.

Can This Goose Stay?

The Shocking Pet Controversy Continues Between North Fork Officials And The Osinski's

By R.B. Stuart

Since last September, retired Wall Streeter Michael Osinski of Greenport, has been getting the once over by the Zoning Board of Appeals because of his two pet geese, Christmas and Thanksgiving. Originally, he bought them so that they could be eaten on those holidays, but his kids became fond of them and wouldn't let them be cooked. Suddenly, two geese became part of the family.

Osinski's wife, Isabel, has always loved geese since childhood. Her family in China owned them and they were part of their underwear company, "Goose Down Under." So their reasons are harmless, except not to the Greenport Board who is uncertain whether or not they fit the village code, which limits household pets to three. But does it count if they don't live in the house? Other Greenport residents have more than three dogs or cats and feel the law needs revision.

Osinski even tried to return the geese, but the farm said the gander (the male) wouldn't accept them, so they would have to be killed. Unwilling to accept this as their fate, he kept them. In doing so, he noticed that they are great for eating the weeds out of the brick pathways around the house. Most homeowners use poisons to get rid of the weeds, which is bad for the environment. But a goose does the job just as well.

The Osinski's and their goose.

Osinski and his family live on three acres of waterfront property with five underwater acres where he operates his oyster farm, "Widow's Holé Oyster Company," and has been for two years. "I put a fence around my yard last spring because my neighbor, a village trustee, was encroaching on my land by building an outdoor shower. I had already given him free docking for a six-year period and he's even docked up to three boats and I never said a thing. All this started because of the fence," Osinski explained.

He has never received any complaints by his other neighbors who didn't even know he had two geese. The citation from the village trustee who lives over 250 feet away spurred the town into question Osinski's outdoor pets.

This reporter has an opinion on this. I could see if they were walking aimlessly around town pooping everywhere, going in and out of stores, quacking at people and trying to pluck out the wallets of passersby, being a problem. But they're not doing that. They are contained and happy on their waterfront property with their humanoids and a canine family.

There may be an issue with the oysters, however. A board chairperson questioned if the geese and dog are in the same proximity as the oysters. Osinski states however, that he meets all the requirements of the Department of Environmental Conservation.

The geese haven't always been peaceful cohabitants for the Osinski's. In the first few weeks he admits they were honking a bit in their new residence, probably suspecting they were in line for Tiny Tim's table. But when they felt safe and had bonded with their owners and the new environment, they relaxed, and began following him around like dogs. He does say that their presence attracts Canada geese, ospreys and sea gulls to the area. They probably know Christmas and Thanksgiving have a good thing and want a piece of the prime Long Island

Since the geese are migrating all over the area, I wonder if the town will create a Fowl Patrol, and warn the foreign invaders that no more than two can fly over head at once. And if you're from Canada no packs flying in formation will be permitted. After all Greenport does own the sky rights too.....it's only fair.

I am personally in dismay about these pet regulations because I am contemplating buying a Tasmanian Devil for a pet. I should probably do more research and find out what the restrictions are on anything other than felines or canines. Does the law pertain to mice in your walls? What about a termite count? Are those considered pets too since they live in your home? I was going to buy a dozen goose eggs for Easter dinner. Should I inform the town prior to see if I need a permit for the eggs? Gee, I'll have to look into that.

I guess instead of a Tasmanian Devil, I could option for a half a dozen stick insects. They are one of the most popular insects to keep as pets. They can hide in plain sight with camouflage that is so perfect they are nearly invisible, and if I were inspected I could pass them off as a dirty house.

It sure is complicated these days to love another creature with the rampant discrimination towards the animal kingdom. But I'm sure glad the town board members are staying on top of things and protecting us from bonding with too many animals at once. We could after all be seduced to live in the wild ourselves.

Restrained, Elegant Releases from Sherwood House Vineyards

Starting with my first sip of their richly Burgundian 2001 Chardonnay last summer, I've been a Sherwood House Vineyards enthusiast. Owners Charles and Barbara Smithen, along with winemaker Gilles Martin (of Martha Clara Vineyards), share a devotion to graceful, Old World-style wines that really comes through in the bottle.

Next week, Sherwood House Vineyards' cozy little tasting room will re-open for 2006 and to celebrate, they are releasing three new wines — two from the 2002 vintage and one from 2003. The differences between the 2001 and 2002 growing seasons (2001 was hotter) are apparent, but the 2002 wines are no less charming.

ing. Sherwood House Vineyards 2003 ($24), their first Cabernet Franc release, is decidedly less fruity than most local renditions. While a little less aromatic than some Cabernet Franc, its nose presents plums and smoke with a touch of fresh herbs in the mix. Medium-to-light bodied, plum flavors are accented by smoky oak influence and black pepper notes. Though perhaps a little pricey for your next barbeque, this red is a nice pairing to grilled meats.

Sherwood House Vineyard's tasting room is located north of Route 48 on Elijah's Lane, and will open April 15. Keep an eye out for Rufus and Raven the Smithen's vineyard dogs.

The house is expensive. Your mortgage shouldn't be.

Starting with the 2002 wines, the Sherwood House 2002 Chardonnay ($20) is a striking crystal-clear light gold in the glass. The nose seems less intense than the 2001 but features similar aromas — pear, sweet toasty oak and citrus hints. Medium-full bodied, the texture is somewhat creamy with nicely balanced flavors of pear, toasty marshmallows and oak nuance. I would have liked perhaps a touch more acidity, but this is an extremely stylish Chardonnay that certainly carries on Sherwood House's white Burgundy tradition. Lobster seems the ideal accompaniment.

Sherwood House Vineyards 2002 Merlot ($24) shows a similar, vintage-related dip in ripeness and concentration, but delivers an enchanting mélange of raspberry, cherry and wet stone on the nose — with nearly identical flavors carrying over in the mouth. This wine is medium bodied, features sultry, super-fine tannins that that give way to a vanilla inflected finish. Winemaker Martin didn't overdo the oak — an excellent choice. His restraint is the key to this wine's length and overall quality. Pour this wine along side roast turkey or pork dishes.

Stylistically, Long Island Cabernet Franc is all over the map, with seemingly every winery having its own interpretation of style. Some are light and fruity, some are spicier, some are hefty and brood-

It's All Baseball On The North Fork

Several North Fork Baseball Fans Let Our Reporter Know Where They Stand

By Phyllis Lombardi

Granted. There are a few golfers on the North Fork and even some folks who swing at a tennis ball. But now that it's finally April, baseball is what we watch, play, and talk. Especially talk. Join in the conversation at the Cutchogue Diner, at the Hess station in Riverhead, or out at the Candyman in Orient. Wherever you are on the North Fork this time of year, you'll hear baseball.

We'll speculate on this new season, of course. But listen closely and you'll hear those baseball memories. From the kids, the grandparents and from everyone in between.

Let's eavesdrop on a San Francisco Giants fan that lives in Aquebogue. He goes by the name of Don Frank.

Don grew up in Brooklyn and had to fend off the taunts of the fans. Why? Because he was a New York Giants fan who spent lots of time at the Polo Grounds cheering for the likes of Mel Ott and the Say Hey Kid.

One of Don's memories is a father-son thing. During World War II, admission to the Polo Grounds often required a donation of scrap metal to support the war effort. Don and his father carried the metal on the several subways it took to get from Brooklyn to the Bronx—a labor of love for team and country, and a little extra from Don.

He and his family later moved to Mineola where Don and a friend mowed and raked the lawn of Mrs. Charles Ebbets. That lady said she would give the two boys tickets to her box in Ebbets Field but only if they promised not to root for those Giants.

And here's Cutchogue's Jody Gillen. Let's listen to her. When she was a youngster in Rochester, New York, Jody traveled a two-bus trip to see the Rochester Red Wings play. At the time, the Red Wings, a St. Louis Cardinals farm team, boasted both Stan Musial and Red Schoendienst. Jody went to the games with her sister, Jean. They always stopped at a Planters Peanut store near the ballpark and bought five pounds of nuts from Mr. Peanut. Then off to the ballpark, where admission for Jody was only a dime. That's because she was a proud member of the Knot Hole gang.

This next gentleman is considerably younger than Don or Jody. Southold's Shayne Johnson is only eight years-old but his enthusiasm for baseball, his skills on the field and, yes, his knowledge of baseball history is pretty impressive.

Shayne is a Mets man with a bedroom full of Met stuff to prove it. Last summer he spent a week at the All-League Baseball Camp held at Tasker Park in Peconic. Shayne excelled at camp. Matter of fact, he was chosen Camper of the Week. Hear Shayne now as he pleads with his mother and father for a two-week camp stay this summer.

Speaking of Shayne's parents, they're baseball people, too.

Dad, Bob, accompanies Shayne to at least ten Long Island Ducks games every summer. Mom, Jill, speaks of a grandpa, a father, and two brothers who worked at both Shea and Yankee stadiums. And this summer the whole family hopes to get to Boston for Shayne's first visit to Fenway. That should make our next North Fork fan very happy.

She's Greenport's Pauline Winterbottom. Pauline grew up in Auburn, Maine. She was, she claims, born a Sox fan and a Yankee-hater. In her Auburn neighborhood there were 35 kids who played baseball morning, noon and night and Yaz was the guy they all admired.

When Pauline was 11-years-old, she entered a free raffle at a small Auburn store. She was unaware of the prize and unsure of her own luck. So she filled in her father's name on the raffle ticket — and he won. The prize? A round-trip for two to Boston with the highlight; a tour of Fenway and a game.

Never for a moment did Pauline believe in the Sox curse. That's what she says, anyway. No, she maintains, it just wasn't their time. Well, it was their time in 2004 and Pauline admits to teasing, even tormenting, every Yankee fan who came her way.

Has she ever been to Yankee Stadium for a game? No. Never. This is said with such finality I suspect she'd crawl to Fenway first.

But enough of Fenway and the Red Sox. I saved the best for the last, my New York Yankees. Even though Tommy Holmes of the old Boston Braves was one of my distant, very distant relatives, The Bronx Bombers claimed my devotion. In the late 40s I became a bona fide member of a Phil Rizzutto fan club. We met one afternoon a week and talked about the Scooter. Holy cow!

I have one other special Yankee memory. For more than 50 years the public address announcer at Yankee Stadium has been the great Bob Sheppard. His voice, heard and loved by many millions, has narrated so much pageantry in the House That Ruth Built.

However, from 1950-1953, Mr. Sheppard was my high school speech and debate teacher. I can't imagine he remembers me. But I recall a tall, thoughtful, elegant man (he was "old" to me then, perhaps he was 24) who expected much of us. I am in his debt. As we are all in baseball's debt. Well, not all. I did discover a certain Peconic person, Toni, who actually dislikes baseball. I'm not inclined to give you her reasons why. Nor, for her sake, do I dare tell you her last name. Let's just say that, on the North Fork, she's in a league of her own.

A Super Hot, 20-Foot Lot

A Real Estate Battle Between The Suffolk Theatre And Apollo Real Estate Advisors

By R.B. Stuart

When Queens native, and Cutchogue resident of 19 years, Robert Castaldi, first purchased the Suffolk Theatre, Riverhead town and its people gave him the responsibility of infusing life back into downtown Riverhead. Resting the revitalization of Riverhead upon his shoulders was a burden he didn't ask for when he purchased the defunct art deco theatre for $700,000 last January.

"My wife and I saw the theatre and fell in love with it. It had been vacant for 18 years and was close to being demolished. We knew we had to rescue it and in doing so we'd save a piece of Riverhead history," Castaldi said.

Castaldi, a contractor and exterior restorations specialist, has come to the aid of other buildings in the past like the Empire State Building and the Vanderbilt Museum in Centerport. "I spent 25 years in the city fighting with landlords, developers and traffic. I thought the theatre would have been a nice project and fun, it ain't fun anymore," Castaldi admits.

The pressure of trying to preserve the theatre in its original interior on the timeline is difficult. He has gone through many unforeseen problems. "Before this project, we were not in the theatre business or the non-for-profit business, so we've learned a lot along the way. Because my construction has stalled and design plans have changed, people are going to have to realize, as with any construction plans, that it always takes longer than expected," he explained.

Another hurdle has now presented itself for Castaldi. A real estate firm called Apollo Real Estate Advisors wants to build a Cineplex, apartments, a garage and a food store next to the theatre. Due to parking regulations, a 20-foot lot, owned by Riverhead town near both properties needs to be purchased for the Suffolk Theatre to fulfill the parking regulations. The Apollo firm says that if the theatre uses this lot for parking, they won't be able to build their project. A battle for the 20-foot-lot has begun.

Last November, Castaldi and his architect, Rick Stott, had a meeting with the Building department to review the plans for the theatre. After analysis of the plans, it was decided that there was a need for a handicap ramp and a buffer zone. This would require the additional 20-foot strip of land. They offered the town $12,500 for the land, which, at the time, it appeared the town was going to accept.

Two weeks ago, however, the discussions with Apollo and Riverhead began. The town is still in talks with Apollo as they have yet to be contracted for the project. "From sitting in on the meetings, I guess Apollo's plan is conceptual. In order to build the Cineplex, they'd have to take a piece of the church and my parking lot. It seems to me they've assumed a lot and haven't done their homework at all," said Castaldi.

The Apollo guys have some smart people working for them, but it does appear that they can't work around the 20-foot lot. They need it to build what they want and they may offer more money to the town for it.

Last week at the Riverhead Town Hall meeting, Don Elliot Secunda, an attorney for Apollo explained that they were interested in the property and were going to make an offer to buy it.

Castaldi doesn't want this to happen, hoping to save the Suffolk Theatre and get it open soon. "We're simply trying to save a piece of history. It's simply more than a brick box. The memories, the history, the beauty, it's a perfect jewel. And we're trying to bring it back because it's what Riverhead needs. Everybody's forgetting that if we didn't save the building, it wouldn't exist right now. People are working very hard to restore it. And we need to keep our eye on the big picture: To restore the theatre and provide a viable, thriving performing arts center that we can all be proud of," he ended.

How this all turns out remains to be seen, but you can say that both parties are battling very hard over a very small piece of land. Can't a movie theatre and performing arts theatre co-exist? Can't something be done about this?

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

STUDENT ART SHOW AT THE MORRISS CENTER

Student art is currently thriving at other venues besides the major museums here in the Hamptons. A case in point: The Morriss Center, a private high school (ninth and tenth grades) associated with the Hampton Day School. The Visual Arts Program, under the direction of instructor Jesse Pasca, stresses diverse media, experimentation and an interdisciplinary approach that public school systems can't always address. Reason: national educational goals consider passing tests in traditional "academic" subjects to be a top priority.

While the photography exhibition at The Morriss Center features varied subject matter and different aesthetic problems, much of the work responds to typical teenage issues; namely, "Who am I?" and "What am I doing here?" This introspection is contrasted with a concern for technique and craft: a perfect combination not always found in many art programs.

Angela Gay's theme, a lack of innocence in girls today, is often subtly expressed in her works. Her female subject sitting on the floor is juxtaposed with a stool, reinforcing myriad similar ideas: object vs. human; objective vs. subjective; outward vs. inward. There's a sexual connotation in these and other images by Ms. Gay that seems appropriate given the concept of identity.

Sarah Roberts Hale's photographs feature what appears to be a younger sibling, but the most potent are those of her mother's clothes closet, images that serve as a signature for the questioning of diverse selves: the external object (clothes) and the internal psyche.

Works by Dylan Kraft (who also curated the exhibition) celebrate the expressionistic style ("A Shadow's Home") while also showing that the contrast between blacks and whites represents the split between the open self and the hidden self.

Some of Christopher Golden's images are expressionistic as well, especially his steps. Could these also signify passages or stages in the development of self-identity? Not all of Mr. Golden's pictures are so psychologically oriented, of course. He also photographs objects primarily for their compositional properties, including a toilet.

Finally, Erin Dickerson's images of animals may not be about the search for identity either, at least at first glance, but they are just as arresting. The works show the photographer's connection with nature; the animals, particularly, evoke a sense of personality that makes them almost human.

The show will be on view at The Morriss Center until mid-April. Call for hours and directions. (631-907-3028).

Critic's Choice Student Invitational Art Show, will be on view until April 8th at Sacred Hearts. Call the center for more information.

HONORING THE ARTIST: GAVIN SPIELMAN

We caught up with this week's cover artist, Gavin Spielman, in Washington, D.C. where he was spending the weekend with his six-year-old daughter, Sage, and his wife, Alison.

Q: The cherry blossoms are out there, I know, even though I can't see them here in East Hampton. But I can almost smell them. The scene is quite different from your setting, "Red Barn," that's on our cover. There the trees are leafless.

A: That's right. It's a far cry from Washington, considering that the scene is from Cutchogue on the North Fork.

Q: How would you characterize the work, aesthetically speaking?

A: It's a study in composition, in symmetry specifically. I wanted to show the spatial difference between the sky and the ground. The red barn is a beacon of warmth and connects the two elements. My goal was to omit the extraneous objects.

Q: How is this piece similar to other paintings that you do?

A: I'm always working with temperature fields, warm vs. cool, and how these complements are working. First, I like to keep the painting loose, to keep out the details. Then I create nuances.

Q: You like to compare painting to cooking.

A: Yes. I like to cook. I know how something will taste or look like before it's finished. I rely on instinct. I add salt and pepper, spices at the final stage.

Q: That's like nuances in your art.

A: Right. I know if the work (dish) will fly in the initial stage.

Q: You also teach at Parsons School of Design where you graduated. (He also studied music and philosophy at another institution before he went to Parsons.) Can you compare teaching and painting, like you did with cooking?

A: Well, I think teaching has helped me be more organized in my art. For example, my studio used to be messy. I say to the students now, "A clean environment leads to clean art." I also give my students assignments that I also have done, like painting still lifes to stimulate color choices. And I always give them a self portrait to do. I do them from time-to-time if I'm facing certain challenges.

Q: What do you think the most valuable lesson is that you've learned as an artist, not as a teacher or cook?

A: I have learned the importance of giving myself over completely to my work. That the day-to-day experience of painting is rooted in my blood. Everyday, I establish a rhythm, like being a runner or a fisherman.

A: I can see how painting for you relates to a lot of different professions.

Q: Yes, but my life really revolves around my family. That's the most important thing.

Dave Evans' MINI – MOVIE REVIEWS

The Benchwarmers

Post-Oscars and pre-summer cinematic pickings are always slim, but this is absurd. Jon Heder, David Spade and Rob Schneider play three washed-out thirty-somethings who form a baseball team to play against various Little League teams and live their childhood dreams. This is drab, derivative trash of the lowest order and all involved should be appropriately punished.

Phat Girlz

Mo'Nique takes the lead in this colorful but crass romantic comedy about two "larger" ladies who find themselves adrift in a world of pencil-thin women. There's nothing subtle here and perhaps nor should there be, but it's hard not to cringe when the whole premise boils down to the racist stereotype that black men simply can't resist plus-size women. One to avoid.

Take The Lead

Is there room for even one more film about an unconventional teacher working with kids from the wrong side of the tracks? The answer is no, but this is pleasant enough. The children in question act surprisingly well, aided by the ever-excellent Alfre Woodard. Hell, even Antonio Banderas seems to have pulled out a bit of the sparkle he so conspicuously lost a decade or so ago.

Lucky Number Slevin

Following Kiss Kiss Bang Bang's noir-lite lead comes director Paul McGuigan's star-stuffed offering.

Rashad (Tip Harris) is a teenager carrying the weight of the world after the death of his parents leaves him squarely responsible for his younger brother Ant (Evan Ross). Even Ray Romano is bearable, hidden inside a CG wooly mammoth.

Basic Instinct 2

Fourteen years since the original comes the sequel that perhaps only Sharon Stone has been waiting for. The action has moved to London in the hope of acquiring some elusive European sheen to the soft-core antics of murderess Catherine Tramell, but otherwise

Slither

This week's dose of schlock horror is directed by a true veteran, James Gunn of Tromeo and Juliet infamy. Here a town is overrun by an alien plague which transforms people into zombies and worse. It's uninspiring nonsense but done with great gusto and for those crazed fans of Joss Whedon's Firefly and Serenity, a chance to see Nathan Fillion's Mal in a different setting.

Inside Man

It's sad to watch Jodie Foster slip from one of Hollywood's most powerful actresses to the competent star of slick but drab thrillers such as Panic Room or Flightplan. This is at least an improvement on those, with a strong cast (Denzel Washington and the ever excellent Clive Owen) and fascinating director (Spike Lee, making perhaps his least overtly political film yet).

Stay Alive

Another week rolls around accompanied, as always, by the sounds of photogenic but brain-dead teenagers slaughtered en masse. This batch find themselves dying in real-life as they fail in the videogame of the film's title, with the remaining few realizing they must defeat the Blood Countess or face the ultimate consequence. Fodder played by Sophia Bush of "One Tree Hill" and the diminutive Frankie Muniz.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood in The Hamptons

In the 1980s, Spike Lee's spiky-needling film She's Gotta Have It helped propagate rebellious black movies and establish his own terrain whereupon he could do and say what he needed to say with self-possessed audacity. He called that plot of independence 40 Acres and a Mule Filmworks. He did the right thing with films like Do The Right Thing and Malcolm X. But now, Mr. Lee has chosen to turn over his special plot of land to Hollywood developers. His new movie, Inside Man, a slick, pleasurable-as-heck entertainment ("Hell" is too meaningful) shows that he can do what all those fair-haired guys with houses in Beverly Hills do. So?

So, what? So, it's not for me to totally despair. Inside Man does not sell out the farm. It has some riffing on social issues: the racial profiling and the manipulation of black young people. There's quite a snappy, sarcastic bite of ethnic awareness along with the aforementioned, but I think I should credit a brilliant first screenplay by Russell Gewirtz. It has a fine sense of freshness, even though it falls into some predictable ruts.

Inside Man starts out with typical "heist" movie moves. Clive Owen, as a rascally, naughty bad guy, tells the camera, "I'm about to commit the perfect bank robbery." But is he? With an overbearing sense of style, he forces those within the bank to change into pretty much the same unflattering jumpsuits the robbers wear. Is this a stand off? Sure it is. Will it be a kind of Dog Day Afternoon? Yeah, but different. The terrific plot changes keep you on your toes. The wee, little toenails will keep you on edge. They'll be tickled pink. You've got three top actors in tip-top form and with that gold coast budget you've got two of 'em in ultra snazzy outfits. Ya' got Denzel Washington dazzling in clothes that should make Calvin Klein weep, bow ties and all. It's no wonder he needs a raise – those duds on a detective and one slipping around in a corruption scandal? He jumps at negotiating the Wall Street heist, banking on a promotion. Denz strides through his performance with the glitz and superiority of a midnight blue Mercedes Benz. His opponent, Clive, is much more guileful and treacherous than Washington assumed, but his truly heavy-duty opponent is the third star, Jodie Foster.

Inside Man

Ms. Foster is a connected, power broker who plays hard outside the law and inside the criminal underworld – high above both. Maybe it's those stiletto stilt-length heels. Maybe it's those lovely, light color, form-fitting suits, and what a form! And what legs rising above the penthouse-high heels! They cannot, however, top her ability! She holds sway over the protection of the bank's Chairman of the Board (Christopher Plummer) who is hiding something. This is Ms. Foster's finest 2 hours and 8 minutes in quite a while. She strides tough through the boys in her best brawny, brawl-busting style with wits as sharp and dangerous as her shoes.

Inside Man, is cynically funny. The routine heist/hostage story is salted with humorous sidebars. There's an ancient Rabbi fussing over diamonds. An ear-battering young woman always on her cell phone and a woman who'd rather have bullets shot through her than take off her clothes. A riot is a black kid who teaches Owen how to play a violent, politically horrible video game on his PSP. Owen tells him, "I'm going to have to talk to your father about this game." Let's face it, you, the audience, become a hostage as well to the box office, begging entertainment values of this chancy hybrid. Hey, everybody wins.

The paranoia that followed the creation of the two gaping holes left in Manhattan's skyline is injected with the least pain possible. People of color who can be "suspects" have a bit of a say, but it is succinctly put by the video game kid who declares, "I'm not scared – I'm from Brooklyn."

One of my cock-eyed theories about filmmaking is: today, given a good script – a cat or even a rocket scientist from Brooklyn could produce a hit movie with the massive budget for a great support group. What I'm saying is that Spike Lee has made better films (even those maddeningly uneven) because they were solely his in spite of being made with simply a mule on forty plain old, not so green, acres.

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals. He is assisted by Sarah Halsey.

review: the property known as garland...by gordin & christiano

The new play by Billy Van Zandt, The Property Known as Garland, is set backstage just prior to Judy Garland's final concert in Copenhagen and a few months before the legendary star's death on June 22, 1969 from an accidental overdose of Seconal at the age of 47. Judy Garland is a true legend, a product of the old MGM studio system. Although she appeared in over 30 feature films (mostly musicals), she is best known to the world as Dorothy from the 1939 classic The Wizard of Oz. Her signature song from that treasured film, "Over the Rainbow," is known to millions worldwide.

When her film career dried up, she continued touring the world, performing one woman concerts that have become legendary as well. She is one of a kind. For the uninitiated, she is also the mother of another legend - Liza Minnelli. Her dramatic life is soap opera personified!

Judy's death is considered the spark that triggered the Stonewall Riots in Greenwich Village, when gays and drag queens fought back against police oppression, bringing rise to the gay civil rights movement. She is a cult icon. Her image is even pictured with Toto on one of four commemorative 25 cent postage stamps honoring classic films released in 1939.

Many books have been written about her, chronicling her dramatic ups and downs. There have been two TV movies detailing her struggles. Andrea McArdle played her in Rainbow (1978), and Judy Davis won an Emmy, as well as a Golden Globe, for her portrayal of the icon in Life with Judy Garland: Me and My Shadows (2001). Isabel Keating won a Drama Desk award for best-featured actress in a musical, playing Garland in The Boy from Oz (2003), but never before has anyone attempted to tell her story on the stage.

Numerous female impersonators do her, but their re-creations consist mostly of singing her famous songs. Most notable is Tommy Femia, who has been impersonating Garland for years. Considering the history and dramatic scope of her life, it's rather surprising that it's taken so long for a play about her to appear.

Mr. Van Zandt's play is a fictional account of what could have happened backstage before Judy's final concert appearance. The story, essentially a one-woman show, portrays Judy behaving like a diva with an overwhelmed stage manager (Kerby Joe Grubb). She smokes, she downs glasses of Blue Nun, and she demands mashed potatoes and green beans, while sharing remembrances of her turbulent life and career, sometimes through flashbacks with her mother. The script offers little new material regarding antidotes or insights into her outrageous behavior.

The evening might have worked if the lead actress had embodied Garland, but Adrienne Barbeau does not display the necessary depth. Ms. Barbeau has not been seen on stage in New York for over 30 years, although she originated the role of Betty Rizzo in Grease, scoring a Tony nomination for best featured actress in a musical. She left the show shortly after its move to Broadway, when she was cast as Bea Arthur's daughter, a role that made her famous, in the classic

Adrienne Barbeau

TV show "Maude."

Little since has prepared her for the challenge of playing Judy Garland on the stage, it seems, and the direction by Glenn Casale hasn't encouraged her to go far enough. While she is a very capable actress and hints at some of the star's mannerisms, she barely suggests Judy's essence and is not nearly theatrical enough. Her work is mostly in the middle range.

Judy was a volatile, mesmerizing personality, possessed with a wonderful sense of self-deprecation, and she imbued her story telling with a sense of relish that was a joy to witness. She could be hysterically funny with an underlying edge of pathos. Ms. Barbeau's work displays little of these qualities or Ms. Garland's intense inner life. There is no real diva here and, as a result, the evening is rather "Ho Hum," ironically a title Judy considered for her autobiography. Paging Tommy Femia please! His show Judy Garland Live, is currently at "Don't Tell Mama," 336 West 46th Street on Saturday evenings.

THE DAN'S PAPERS THEY MADE THE MOVIE HERE FILM FESTIVAL

Sweet Liberty

Saturday, April 8, at 1 p.m. Dan's Papers' "Movies Made Here" FREE Film Festival begins another season of well-seasoned movies that have their roots out here, at times appropriately smack dab in the farm fields. This week's film, Sweet Liberty, was shot on location in Sag Harbor where its residents bared their shaded streets, down-east houses, up-scale shops, buck-toothed smiles, and buck-naked butts. Yes, it's that kind of wild comedy.

Alan Alda's 1986 Sweet Liberty is sweet indeed! He uses Sag Harbor as a stand-in for a Southern College Town taken over by a film crew shooting a Revolutionary War story. Mr. Alda, as writer, star and director of the laughingly sweet Sweet Liberty gives us a story-within-a-story – as the real-life writer of movies there must be a lot of himself in his movie character, a College Professor watching a movie company hacking his very correct novel of the American Revolution into spicy chopped liver to lure audiences to the box office. And using Sag Harbor, our picturesque, historic, literate, and hysterically tasty little hamlet suits the purpose to a tee. (You can almost catch a whiff of the tea bags steeping in the harbor.)

Sweet Liberty is not nearly as calorically heavy as Hollywood's usual chopped liver. The story is LITE and GOOD for you. The (step back) meatiness bulges from the acting muscles of its very sturdy cast. Michael Caine is a suicidal Don Juan of an actor who has the leading role in the movie within a movie as the upright British Colonel riding roughshod in the Colony. The magnificent Mr. Caine as the amorous actor also rides rough-shod over anything in lacy pantaloons or Victoria Secret's panties. Michelle Pfeiffer is a tough, tart cookie who can convincingly play a wilting Colonial maiden. Bob Hoskins huskily plays the schlock-meister, a whore of a screenwriter chopping up the classy book. Mr. Alda mills about in his Water Mill kind of way as his professor's literary and personal life is made into mincemeat. The terrific cast includes the revered Lillian Gish, the lovely Lois Chiles and ever-amusing Saul Rubinek.

Enjoy manic fencing with swords and words, Sag Harbor's white fencing, round robin romances, big battle scenes and a little ribald mass bathing in the nude. However, at the theater you are expected to appear clothed. After all, this takes place at the Ross School on Goodfriend Drive (off Route 114) in East Hampton. As you know it's not only proper, it is swanky, and refreshments are again served by Sarah Halsey.

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals.

MAYOR ED KOCH Goes To THE MOVIES

I was warned to stay away from this film by every reviewer I read, and after seeing it, I came to the conclusion that those other critics were too kind in their reviews. It is the absolute worst. The London scenes reminded me of the Masterpiece Theatre series "Prime Suspect," starring Helen Mirren, which was wonderful in every way. Other than the interesting locations, however, everything else about Basic Instinct 2 is over the top and ridiculous.

Novelist Catherine Tramell (Sharon Stone) is suspected of killing a passenger in her car due to excessive speed and the use of drugs. Dr. Michael Glass (David Morrissey) is a court-appointed psychiatrist who becomes her lover, and Detective Roy Washburn (David Thewlis) is a London detective bent on finding a serial murderer. Charlotte Rampling is surprisingly thrown in as Dr. Milena Gardosh, a psychiatrist friend of Dr. Glass. The script includes several murders, a house of prostitution Amsterdam style, a lesbian relationship, homosexual shagging, and an opening scene generally described by reviewers as Sharon Stone pleasuring herself. Because of the bad script and delivery, the film becomes a bad and unintended comedy.

Basic Instinct 2 (-)

All in all, after you have read this review, let me have been the last person to see this film, which was number ten last week in terms of box office attendance.

When In Manhattan...BY OLIVER PETERSON

Subway Story

I clearly remember the shift concerning the New York City subway system when, after growing up there in the late 70s through the 80s, I returned to attend college. The cars were cleaner, graffiti was basically nonexistent aside from the "scratchiti," or words carved into the plastic windows and seats, and a ride underground felt safe. As a kid every subway car was covered in rich urban art, people smoked in their seats, shady characters ruled, and Manhattan's underworld wafted with the distinct scent of body odor and urine. At the time, it wasn't uncommon for a third of New York's fleet to be out of commission due to broken down cars, fires, and derailments. It was a scary place that I never dared to set foot. Cabs weren't as expensive then. I also had a bus pass. For the most part, the old stigma of subway danger has been superseded by the convenience and efficiency of one of the most successful mass and rapid transit systems in the world.

Subway construction actually broke ground in New York over 100 years ago, in 1900. At that point, our neighboring city was the second biggest on the planet, but the outer boroughs were largely unpopulated in comparison to Manhattan. Nearly three and a half million people filled the island because any sort of commute from these underdeveloped areas was next to impossible. Just going from Wall Street to Harlem took hours. The electric-powered subway for the IRT (Interborough Rapid Transit Company) was put in place by digging trenches for the 55-foot wide and 15-foot high tunnels beneath the ground. On October 27th, 1904, the subway opened and 150,000 passengers spent a nickel to ride. It was the fastest transportation system in the world, and it permanently changed the dynamic of the city.

When commuting became a sensible and real possibility, and more lines opened, whole neighborhoods and communities popped up around the stations. The MTA (Metropolitan Transit Authority) notes that in the 1890s Harlem was "a little town in the suburbs, but by 1914, 75 percent of New York's African Americans lived there." Another interesting fact that is directly linked to the creation of the subway is that by 1923, a million people inhabited the "formerly bucolic" Bronx – making it as populated as the sixth biggest city in the United States.

Over the years, the subway opened more and more lines and stations. There were fare increases, spikes and dips in popularity and quality, changes in ownership, and the eventual deterioration that began in the 40s and continued into those lovely years in the 70s and 80s I described earlier. Slowly, beginning in 1982, the MTA began to rehabilitate the subways through a number of five-year Capital Programs. $39 billion has been invested since they began, and, as we've discovered, it's worked. By 1990, the system began to look and work better, by 1997, the MetroCard became a universal pass for all city public transit, and by 1999, all sorts of fare and pass options were introduced for regular commuters. Sadly, in 2003 all NYC subways and busses stopped accepting tokens.

In the beginning, subway stations were designed with beautifully artistic grandeur. Arches, plaques, mosaics, kiosks, and murals enriched what could have been drab underground scenery. With the passage of time and the rejuvenation of the system, art once more plays an important role in the subway landscape. The MTA Arts for Transit program has commissioned well over 100 permanent works of art by established and emerging artists to enliven the atmosphere and encourage the use of public transit. With art and improved structure, over 100 stations have been renovated. It's also interesting to note that while these new stations emerge, there are old ones that get left behind. A new breed of adventurers calling themselves "urban explorers" travel into the cavernous depths of Gotham's underbelly to experience and document these relics of the past. Along with them some graffiti artists still find their way below to leave their marks behind. The proposition of these explorations is rather frightening when you look at the 1990 MTA study that found there to be 6,031 homeless living within the tunnels. Some have functioning communities, while others live deep down in the black depths – usually accompanied only by their madness and the disproportionately large rats. It's got to be fascinating to explore, but for the slightly less brave, maybe try riding the NR back and forth for an evening. You might see some interesting things – or at the very least get a ticket for loitering.

TAKE A HIKE WITH KEN KINDLER

Sagg Swamp, A Stone Ship, and More

Last Sunday, the Pine Barrens Society (PBS) sponsored a trail work outing in the David Sarnoff Preserve. Thirty-five volunteers arrived at the NYS DEC parking area on the west side of CR 104, 2 miles south of the Riverhead Circle. In the ten years that I've been working on Long Island's trails, this is the largest trail maintenance party I have ever participated in. Elina Alyeva of the PBS and John Virgilio deserve special recognition for organizing this event. Mike Giocondo, DEC Ranger, came in on his day off to help. Susie Husted, PBS Program Manager, kept the day running smoothly. PBS furnished tools and food; the Suffolk County Water Authority donated water from "deep in the heart of the Long Island Pine Barrens." There was a positive, upbeat atmosphere and everyone had a good time. The Pine Barrens Society deserves much credit for facilitating this landmark event.

This past Thursday, I joined the Southampton Trails Preservation Society (STPS) trail crew for a work outing in Sagaponack. We created a short trail from Sagaponack Road to Sagg Pond. When we finished our work, Ken Bieger and I walked the Sagg Swamp Preserve Trail. Ken is the maintenance crew co-leader; contact him if you wish to work on trails in Southampton (kbieger@optonline.net).

This 105-acre preserve is located in the southern section of the Long Pond Greenbelt. It is a habitat that encompasses a network of contiguous ponds, streams, wetlands, and adjacent upland woods, from Sagaponack Inlet on the south shore, north to Sag Harbor. The Sagg Swamp Preserve is the largest red maple swamp on the South Fork. The 0.5-mile trail has 700 feet of well-built boardwalk. It was a pleasant trail to walk, but Ken warned me that I should be prepared to encounter a plethora of insects if I visit this trail during the summer. As we entered this lovely Nature Conservancy Preserve, Ken and I noticed that several large red maples had been blown down during the winter; their huge shallow root systems are reaching into the wood's canopy. Heading south into the wetlands, the boardwalk carries you above an environment you would normally need hip boots in order to see.

Directions: When traveling east from Bridgehampton on Montauk Highway, turn right onto Sagg Main Road (the first traffic light after town). Go 0.8-mile; at the stop sign by the little red schoolhouse turn right onto Sagaponack Road. After 0.6 mile you will see the entrance to the TNC Preserve with a large sign describing its history and ecological significance.

On Saturday, I walked with Bill Mathews on one of his field outings. Bill has been giving a course called "Trails of Greater Westhampton" for the Adult and Continuing Education at West Hampton Beach School District for the last fifteen years. The walk started from Speonk Riverhead Road south of Suffolk Community College on the east side of the road. Three vertical metal bars stand at the trail opening. I checked Larry Paul's map (for map call 631-360-0753) and saw that the trail we were meeting at is called "Middle Line of Toppings Purchase." When I asked about the origins of the road, Mathews told us that Toppings Purchase was a huge land purchase that was overturned by the courts after Toppings died. The trail we walked runs east west and intersects a lot of other boundary roads and fire breaks running north and south. Again, I found myself walking on ATV-disturbed trails, but I was caught up in the excitement of an adventure. Bill had informed us that we were searching for a stone ship. During WWII, an outline of a ship was created by laying stone on the ground in the shape of a ship. It was used by the U.S. Air Force for bombing practice. In aerial photographs the "ship" shows up well, and while we searched for it, Bill entertained us with historical facts pertaining to the area. I won't tell you where the "ship" is because Bill feels that we need to protect the area for its historical value before its location becomes common knowledge.

After walking with Bill, I attended the annual Manorville Trails Center Opening, during which we prepare the Trail Center for the summer. When I arrived, most of the work was done, but Lillian McGarvey, our 85-year-old resident trails guru, asked me to check the condition of the nearby trails. While walking them I found myself, once again, in awe of the wonderful trails resources in Suffolk County. Get out and explore them!

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

Amazing Hulks

Amazing Hulks, who the hell buys those things? I'm talking about the Hummers and other super-sized SUVs, like Lincoln Navigators, that one sees cruising the highways. To me, they are just too big to make sense. Perhaps that's why General Motors is in trouble. While the rest of the civilized car world (i.e. Europe and Japan) has been designing small, gas-efficient vehicles, GM has been manufacturing Hummers of all shapes and sizes.

Of course, Ford and Chrysler are also guilty of building super-sized SUVs, but none of their products are as over the top and in your face as the bodacious-looking Hummer. What is it about the paramilitary look that appeals to buyers? That's it, I just answered my own question...it's the paramilitary look.

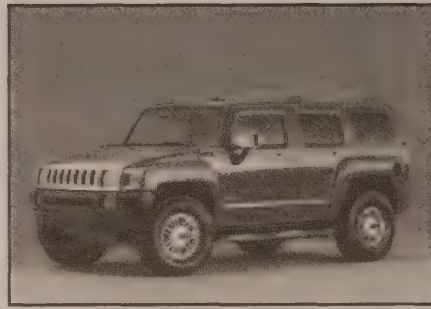

Let's not forget it was the little World War II Jeep that started this whole SUV thing. It's an American thing. It's a war hero vehicle. John Wayne drove one in the The Fighting Seabees and God is my Copilot. The GI Jeep did well in the marketplace because post-war Americans certainly couldn't own and drive a P-51 Mustang or a Patton tank, but they could drive down the highway in a diminutive Jeep. The funny thing is that the original Jeep was simple and frugal on gas. Little could anyone imagine that it was a schizoid machine that would hulk out to morph into the original military Hummer H1.

That was the appeal of the original Hummer H1, which really was a very thinly disguised mil-spec piece of machinery. It created quite a stir when it was first made available to the public. I drove one of the first H1s and it created a sensation when I used it around the Hamptons, because it was the first one anyone had ever seen. In fact, in all the years I've driven exotic looking cars, no vehicle has ever turned more heads and gotten more interest than the Hummer. Of course, no car I'd ever driven was as large and had as much presence. My best moment was when I pulled into Woody's gas station on Montauk Highway to get some diesel fuel. You did this a lot with a Hummer. The wide-eyed young gas attendant filled 'er up. I paid, thanked him, and he looked at the Hummer, and said, "It was my honor sir!" At that moment I felt like Omar Bradley and understood the magic of these amazing hulks.

Whereas the original military road-going version of the AM General Hummer was quite rough and ready (read uncomfortable and noisy), the newer General Motors-built Hummer 2 version is quite civilized. It sorta looks like the original, but it's really a silk purse in an iron glove. It's just too big and too thirsty. In fact, the most common complaint from Hummer owners is that they use too much gas. Conversely, the most common complaint from BMW Mini cooper owners is that their Minis are too small. Are people crazy...can't they grasp the obvious?

The funny thing is that the paramilitary look is still popular all over the world. Take the British Land Rover, for instance. Actually designed after World War II to compete with the American Jeep in the civilian market, the original Land Rover shape is still in production in England. It's called the Defender, and this model was imported here for several years a decade ago. Compared to its upscale sibling, the Range Rover, the Defender is quite crude and rugged looking. I might add that the Defender model is very popular in Europe. Decade-old Defenders that were imported into America are worth about four times as much as a more luxurious Range Rover of the era on the used car market. It's the paramilitary thing, or in the Land Rover case, para-safari.

Of course the styling clues of paramilitary vehicles manifest themselves on virtually every hulking SUV out there. High bodies, large wheels, outside spare tire carriers, massive roof racks and fender flares. You get it. Sometimes, when trying too hard, designers go over the top, like the visually ungainly

Pontiac Aztek. I do believe that if the Aztek were a real war hero, or even just a little more off-road capable, it would have been admired by all for its brawny off-center looks, but no, it was doomed to be just an ugly poseur. Too bad because it was a pretty good highway traveling SUV.

I feel there is a strong market for a smaller fuel efficient SUV. There is a clear appeal for a military look, just look at the success of the evergreen Jeep CJ (Civilian Jeep) series. These vintage-looking WW II shaped SUVs are perhaps the worst handling and most uncomfortable vehicles in the western world, but they "got the look" and have a fanatic following. The new "little" Hummer H3 is a step in the right direction, smaller, more compact, with land-mine-dodging looks. Toyota also has a cool looking retro SUV cruiser just making its appearance in showrooms now, and it's bound for big sales, because it too looks as if there is a sense of history in its shape.

John Wayne may have been on to something. Maybe good things do come in big packages. Maybe. Now if only those amazing hulks can be made to get amazing gas mileage.

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

The weather has been amazing. As I was driving around checking out all the sales, I noticed people were busy getting their gardens ready for an early spring planting..... The towns were also busy and buzzing with shoppers for springtime sales that are blooming all over. Let's do some spring shopping!

At Messina Jewelry at 103 Main Street in Westhampton Beach, you can shop to your heart's content with their "Pre-Season Sale" that is only happening for two days, Saturday and Sunday, April 8 and 9. Messina is offering 50% or more off on jewelry, watches and vintage handbags. This is a special sale and you will save, save, save on upcoming gifts for Mother's Day, graduations and more.

On Jobs Lane in Southampton look for a "Pre-Season Sale" on glasses and sunglasses at OPTYX. Also at Chico's (love this store) - there is a sale on selected merchandise with a cool 20% to 50% off. Rumrunners, also on Jobs Lane, is having a "Storewide Sale".....This shop has it all, sofas, lamps, furnishings and accessories, to fit anyone's home. Paul-Pac on Jobs Lane is having a "Blowout Sale" on selected merchandise. Now is the time to stock up on those great bags and more here.

On Main Street, Rose Jewelers is hosting their annual "Add A Pearl Week" celebration until April 8. This is a special opportunity to add free pearls to your favorite necklace or choker with Rose's special

"buy three pearls, get one free." In addition to this offer, shoppers will find special in-store savings on all pearl jewelry at both Rose Jewelers Southampton and Patchogue locations.

The sale continues at Casual Home on County Road in Southampton where you will find quality furnishings and accessories at affordable prices. Look for 20% to 50% off floor models. The store is filled to the rafters with comfy, cozy furnishings, lighting and accessories.

Water Mill's Piano Barn on Montauk Highway is having their "Piano Winter Clearance Sale" with lots to choose from. I love a piano and took lessons when I was in grammar school and hated every minute of it. So the learning curve was almost nil.....The only thing I remember because I loved it was "The Indian Boy" song, which I play every time I go into a store that sells pianos. The Piano Barn offers free delivery and tuning and all the pianos are in mint condition. Of course I have to add, my daughter Michele runs out the back door when I do that! If you are a piano player, this is the sale for you.....for sure!

In Home Sag Harbor, Fine Furnishings,

Lighting and Gifts, on Main Street thinks everyone is special so they are offering 30% off on the Mitchell Gold and Bob Williams special order event, saving you lots of doe re mi! The sale includes special order upholstery orders and will end on April 15. The store is open Friday through Monday.

At the Headley Studio, located at 40 Madison Street in Sag Harbor, they are holding the annual "Home Clearance Sale," which is not to be missed. The furniture is discounted 50% to 60% off, end tables, dressers, desks, consoles, bookshelves, mirrors (in a variety of sizes, all wood frames with beveled glass), lamps and pottery are from 25% to 50% off. This is a sale not to be missed. The store hours are Thursday through Monday from 1 a.m. to 5 p.m. For more information you can call Headley Studio at 631-725-1194.

Until next week, Ciao and Happy Spring Shopping!

Trash Into Treasure!

With all the trash we throw into landfills each year, we could be making masterpieces! The East Hampton Town Dump does make an excellent destination for a Sunday afternoon, but reducing the number of trips you take to the dump is a step in the right direction toward saving our planet. So much of the trash that gets tossed is actually quite usable. So next time you're loading up your car for a journey over to the dump, think about how much of your refuse is actually trash. Some of it might actually be treasure if you look at it from a different angle.

The Children's Garbage Museum in Stratford, CT has a fantastic example of rescued trash on display. This creature is 24 feet long and weighs 2,000 pounds – a ton. Did you know that each American produces an average of one ton of trash every year? The Trashosaurus, as it has been dubbed, is a monument to this fact. Every year, each one of us could build a 24-foot long dinosaur with everything we throw into the landfills.

This, however, may not be the most logical use of our time, energy, and refuse. I mean, Trashosaurus is cool, but who has the space to build a 24-foot long garbage dinosaur in their backyard? So if you're road-tripping in New England, consider checking out the Children's Garbage Museum and their prized Trashosaurus. But if you're just looking to save the world, one bag of garbage at a time, you can probably think smaller.

Think about all the cars on the road. You've got Hummers, you've got Volkswagens, you've got Minis, you've got Hondas. Each of these cars has four tires, and each of these tires needs to be changed several times throughout the car's life. What happens to these giant rubber monstrosities? All too often, they get thrown in the dump, taking up valuable real estate that could be much more economically utilized. Old tires have a plethora of uses, and throwing them in the dump is an absolute waste. There are a lot of tires that end up in landfills. Creative entrepreneurs have turned old tires into a veritable farmhouse of animals to string up to a tree. Check out www.abundantearth.com to see the creatures that have come from a "useless" old tire. They've created pony swings, mastodons, and airplanes. But you can create a tire swing yourself, even if you're less than creative. Just tie some strong rope to the tire and secure it to a sturdy branch, and you've got yourself a tire swing.

With new music devices like iPods and other MP3 players, CDs are being trashed at the rate legwarmers went out in the early 90s. But unlike legwarmers, these old CDs could be used in many ways. You could make a wind chime by hanging the disks on fishing line. Just string the fishing line around the old disks, tie them up on the ceiling, and let them make music in the breeze!

Earth Day is April 22, and one way to celebrate with your kids is to think of fun, earth-friendly projects like these. Here are just a few tips to make sure that your day of "turning trash into treasure" goes safely and smoothly.

1. Make sure that objects and materials are safe for kids to use. Mosaics are some of the most rewarding art projects, but broken dishes or pottery can be dangerous. If you are going to create a mosaic, make sure to supervise at all time.

2. Make sure that the objects you are going to use are completely clean. Used aluminum cans are fabulous materials, but not if they have dog food stuck to them! Be sure to wash with soap and water before using.

3. Keep your materials for recycled art in a special box. Maybe your child could even decorate the box with recycled items. This way, whenever your child is about to throw something out, he/she will start to think, "could I use this for something else?"

Instilling a sense of value for used goods is an excellent way to remind kids not to be wasteful. Reduce trash by turning it into treasure!

Dining in the Hamptons

A is for Artichoke and Asparagus

Last summer, I wrote about my favorite fruit, the avocado. Perhaps there is something special about the letter A, as this article is about my favorite vegetable, the artichoke, as well as a close runner up, asparagus. Both vegetables are in season now. These versatile foods are delicious on their own or together, and as a snack, a side dish and, in the case of artichokes, a light meal.

We begin with artichokes. These unusual edible thistle, grown in California, are as nutritious as they are delicious. A medium artichoke contains only 25 calories, only six grams of carbohydrates – two of which are fiber – and no fat, yet it is filled with vitamins and is satisfying to eat. Long ago, artichokes were thought to be an aphrodisiac, but I have to say that I haven't noticed a difference since artichokes came into season.

Artichokes are unusual among vegetables, as they need to be cooked through. Before you cook an artichoke, you will want to prepare it. At the store, pick an artichoke whose spiny leaves are still closed fairly tightly. If the bottom leaves are beginning to open, that is fine, but the more layers of leaves that are open, and the higher up they are, the more over-ripe the artichoke. When you are ready to cook, tear off the thick stubby leaves at the bottom. Then use kitchen scissors to snip off the very tip of each remaining leaf, so that the sharp ends are removed. Also, cut off most, but not all, of the stem.

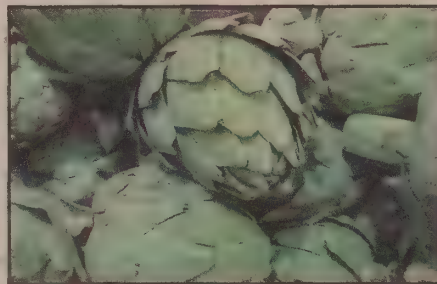

Place the artichoke into a pot of well-salted water. As a general matter, Kosher salt will enhance the flavor of food much better than regular table salt, and artichokes are no exception. Add a lemon half or some lemon juice, too. It does not matter whether the artichoke is fully immersed in the water, but the pot should be covered so that the exposed part of the artichoke steams. It will take a good 45 minutes to cook.

Carefully remove the artichoke and let it rest upside down for a few moments, so the hot water can escape from between the leaves. Allow the artichoke to cool a bit, so it can be handled. You can eat the artichoke hot, cold or at room temperature. Many people enjoy hot artichokes with melted butter. Any type of vinaigrette is delicious with chilled artichokes. But for my money, an artichoke at room temperature is perfect as it is, without any accompaniment.

Eating the artichoke is an adventure. Pluck off a leaf. The outer leaves are sturdier than the inner leaves, but all are edible. To eat an outer leaf, gently bite down on the middle of the leaf and then pull the leaf through your teeth so that you scrape off the "meat." As you proceed inward, the leaves will be soft enough so that you can actually bite off the front part of the leaf.

Eventually the leaves disappear into a sort of thready mess. Using a fork, gently scrape this mess off of the base of the artichoke. You have now reached the "heart" or "choke," many people's favorite part. This meaty mound of artichoke flesh is delicious and filling. The notion of a filling vegetable may seem surprising, but take it from me, someone with a voracious appetite, if I make two artichokes for myself for lunch, I am stuffed after eating them.

On to asparagus. There is a chef's saying: if it grows together, it goes together. This is why in-season corn and in-season tomatoes pair so well, and why we enjoy a medley of root vegetables in the fall. Well, asparagus more or less shares a season with artichokes. The dark color and intense flavor of asparagus blends very nicely with that of artichokes. And asparagus can be served like artichokes – hot, cold or at room temperature, with butter, vinaigrette, or plain.

Asparagus and artichokes depart when it comes to cooking. Particularly the pencil-thin asparagus you will find on the market now which are easily rendered all but inedible through over-cooking. If you are eating the asparagus hot, they should be boiled or steamed for no more than one minute; they will continue to cook after you drain them. If you are eating them room temperature or cold, cook them for about 90 seconds, and then run them under very cold water to stop the cooking. A perfectly cooked asparagus will have a soft, almost al dente crunch. (Thicker asparagus need longer cooking.)

As with artichokes, the cooking water for asparagus should be well seasoned. If you are enjoying asparagus and artichoke as part of the same meal, serve them with the same butter or vinaigrette, or nothing at all. Enjoy these wonderful vegetables often, as their peak season is short, you won't have time to become bored with them.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

At sundown on Wednesday, April 12, Jewish people will sit down to a Seder in honor of the first night of Passover, the eight-day observance celebrating the Israelites' flight to freedom from Egypt during the reign of the Pharaoh Ramses II. This commonly observed Jewish holiday has strong cultural ties to the foods of Passover, and one longs for the dishes prepared by mothers and grandmothers which create an immediate connection to their history.

The foods of my Sephardic ancestors have deep meaning for me and I will prepare several of these much-loved dishes for our Seder. Keftedes de prassa, a mixture of leek and beef – mashed potatoes can substitute for the beef – are tasty little sautéed patties. Huevos haminados are slow-cooked eggs under a mantle of onionskins which lend a brownish tie-dye color to the eggs while leaving a creamy yolk within. Plaki, a delicious sweet and sour whole fish, is baked under a mantle of colorful and slightly crisp vegetables while pastel de carne is a savory, spice-infused meat, onion and parsley mixture, sandwiched between layers of moistened matzo much like a lasagna. Albondigas de matzos consists of tiny matzo meal balls, the size of marbles, with a deliciously dense texture as a result of the kneaded dough. It is served with a modicum of broth, sprinkled with chopped walnuts and parsley.

The different cultures within the Jewish community will traditionally prepare the beloved foods of their origins. For those who will take a more adventurous path, or to add to the traditional meal, I've selected two simple and less time-consuming recipes. Whichever food customs one chooses may they be passed along with stories that are read in the Haggadah, the "recounting" of the Israelites' wondrous exodus from ancient Egypt, during the Passover Seder.

HUEVOS HAMINADOS

Huevos haminados are eggs slowly cooked under a mantle of onionskins lending a reddish brown tie-dye effect to the eggs through the porous eggshell, but leaves a creamy yolk within. I've always thought that these had to have been the first Easter eggs. This uniquely Jewish dish is one of the most ancient dishes of the Mediterranean. It is always included in Sabbath celebrations and appears on holiday tables such as Passover. I usually prepare at least one dozen eggs.

Eggs, enough for each guest at the Passover Seder

Red or brown onionskins or some of both

1 tablespoon red wine vinegar

Square of double or triple-layer of cheesecloth

Coarse (Kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper

1. Have eggs at room temperature before cooking. Put them in a large pot with a tight-fitting lid and enough water to cover the eggs by at least 6 inches and pour in the vinegar. Place onionskins over the eggs and cover with cheesecloth. Replace the lid and cook at the barest simmer your range can handle for 6-7 hours, checking the water level occasionally.

2. Discard the cheesecloth (can rinse out and reuse) and onionskins. Remove the eggs carefully with a slotted spoon when done and serve warm or at room temperature with a sprinkle of salt and pepper.

KEFTES DE PRASSA

(Sephardic leek and beef patties)

Keftes de prassa is sometimes prepared with mashed potatoes and grated Parmesan to replace the meat.

Makes about 8 - 10 patties

3 large leeks

Salt for the cooking water

1/4 pound chopped beef

2 teaspoons vegetable oil

1 egg beaten

2 tablespoons matzo meal plus more to bind as necessary

3 tablespoons chopped flat-leaf Italian parsley

Coarse (Kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper

2-3 tablespoons olive oil for frying

1. Trim and slice the leeks lengthwise washing them well between the layers to remove all sand and dirt. Cut leeks into thin slices.

2. Bring enough salted water to a boil just to cover the leeks. Put in the leeks and simmer briskly about 8-10 minutes until tender. Drain in a strainer and squeeze leek with the back of a wooden spoon very well to remove excess moisture. Transfer leek to a mixing bowl with beef, oil, egg, matzo meal, and parsley. Season with salt and pepper to taste and thoroughly mix ingredients.

3. Moisten hands and shape mixture into patties about 3-inches in diameter. Heat 2 tablespoons of oil in a non-stick skillet and sauté the patties in batches until well-browned on both sides, turning once. Drain on paper towels and serve warm or at room temperature.

Skin deep with Samantha Altea

Custom Made

Since Christmas, I can't go even 100 yards without being stared at or stopped time and again. Why? My Christmas present.

It never fails to make me smile when walking my gorgeous new puppy, Piper, with her shiny black coat, big floppy ears and beautiful brown eyes. She's a people magnet. (If only I'd known before I married.) Piper is the absolute perfect dog for me. You could almost say that she was custom-made. She fits my every requirement. She's seven-months-old, and the two of us are practically inseparable. I've never felt a love like this ever before. Piper is unique – one of a kind. But after a few months of puppy love, as a fashionista who can't help herself, I simply had to accessorize around the little miracle that has turned my whole world upside down. But what would be guaranteed to stop traffic like Piper does?

An early birthday present was the answer.....my Tani Keller Racing pants. They get just as much attention as Piper. I've never had such a reaction, or been as popular as when wearing these incredible, one-of-a-kind pair of custom-made, black leather pants with dramatic white racing stripes. Last time I wore them I was stared at, pointed at, accosted, chased, and all advances came with the same question. "Wow, where did you get those killer pants?"

Combine the two, walking Piper in the pants and I'm almost a rock star.

In a cookie-cutter, there are times when it's nice to stand out in a crowd. Unlike real rock stars, however, I can take the pants off, or custom-make something a little more low-key and more fitting to my personality, were it more demure.

Keller first made her signature pants when experimenting with a pair for herself and experiencing the same show-stopping "where can I get a pair" whirlwind, I find myself in every time I slip them on. It didn't take a brain surgeon to realize that she was on to something. Now, Keller custom makes any type, style, color and combination of pieces in her custom-made Tani Keller design house. Primarily a leather designer, Keller likes to sit with her clients and really get a sense of who they are and what they will feel comfortable in, so that she can customize. She doesn't care about the latest trends. Instead, she looks at personalities then designs a pair of pants, coat, or a dress to match. "Something that will fit you and only you, perfectly – in every sense of the word," she says.

She'll inquire about what else you have in your closet and combine it with what she's designing and will even redesign your entire wardrobe, at $250 an hour. Taking materials from shoes to handbags, pants, skirts and scarves, she turns old pieces into wearable ones in 2006. Keller, who has also been featured in boutique stores like Scoop and Barneys, says that this spring "she's not following or predicting the latest trends," she's "making pieces out of emotion and the personality of the person she's working with."

Keller also has custom signature pieces like her Kimono shirt line, made of light, see-through chiffon with embroidery and embellishments. They look amazing worn over a tank in summer. Gloria Estafan wore them for two tours. But she's not the only celeb who has discovered Keller's unique couture designs. Carol Alt, Halle Berry, Rosalyn Sanchez and Miss Universe 2005 have also worn Tani Keller. Focusing on her custom business, Tani has done a 180 and now even designs stunning and unique couture wedding dresses, from simple to fairy princess, with a Tani twist. Anyone getting married...look up Keller for a custom dress fitted and designed just for you. With a new line in Tuxedo shirts embellished with roses, both in leather and silk, Keller can custom make whatever you like, but also isn't short on ideas to pick from.

In the White Room

In grade school, we're taught that white is the absence of color. But in truth, white light is composed of the entire color spectrum. Thus it embraces subtle hues, from pale blues to tints of green, pink, mauve and gray.

A room saturated in whites may seem sterile, or more appropriate for a hospital than a home. With an all-white room, or even one that's just reliant on white, you can play with color: heat the room with one red wall, try periwinkle for the change of seasons or sea foam green in the bathroom. Bring in a simple bowl full of water with sea glass or green stones. Toss a couple of pumpkin orange throw pillows on a white sofa and watch the room transform. An all-white room is perfect for a few decorative swabs of fabric, a framed watercolor or a goldfish bowl. A cluster of crimson pillows and a pitcher of sunflowers on a nightstand might change your state of mind. A beige coverlet and pale blue alarm clock might promote serenity. Anything that might get lost in a room full of colors demands full attention in a room that's all white.

Each color that you place in this room of white will not only stand out, but it will also change the mood of the room and its inhabitants.

White has its perks, as the Scandinavians know. In a land where the winter sun seldom shines, it is revered for its ability to reflect and enhance the waning light. White was, for a long time, used as a neutral. Landlords insist on a tenant re-painting in white, and white's the default for many people when it comes to walls or sheets or even dishes.

While minimalist decorators and lovers of a Spartan, spa-like serenity, deem white a heroic color, or non-color.

But to make the most of all-white interiors, take out the sleek and frigid chill of minimalism with textural fabrics. In fact, it is the key to keeping white from seeming stale or cold. With a quilted blanket or wall covering, chunky rug, embossed paper lampshade, or a shiny glazed piece of furniture, for instance, you can keep a monochromatic color scheme from becoming monotonous. Vintage-style organdy, a light-weight translucent cotton, eyelet curtains, bed covers of soft wooly knits, even chunky and quilted weaves in a tablecloth, create a feeling of warmth without weightiness. A small light tucked behind a rice paper screen bathes the room in a golden glow. In the bathroom, a combination of snowy linens and honey-hued wood, perhaps pine, conjure the feeling of an invigorating bath in the midst of snowy alpine.

And now for the table – a bone-white bowl looks more pristine set against a frosted glass plate, or a serving dish that barely hints at celery-green. A wheat-colored place mat provides the visual counterpoint to a centerpiece of an arrangement of ivory and pink lilies or a rich indigo tablecloth. Moss-green or ochre tiles laid out on a table or windowsill make white appear brighter and fresher while fluorescent shades give it a softer feel.

Your white dishes can provide a clean slate to play on and dress them up or down with colorful table linens, food, and flowers. White isn't just the absence of color; it's a backdrop against which color is free to reflect, illuminate and play, soothing our eyes in a world complicated by patterns and pigments.

The all-white décor has resurfaced in home decorating, especially in the Hamptons. I, like many other color-enthusiasts, find this style cold, impersonal, even depressing, if overdone. If you make use of the properties white offers in your home, the all encompassing non-pigment will appear pure, clean and balanced. Subtle use of colors, contrasting texture and tone give white its warmth.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Have an Apple-Scented Garden

If you are like me, summer in the garden is a time to appreciate all that nature offers. I relish not only in greener, but also in the various animal and insect visitors that come to the garden (excluding, of course, mosquitoes – which I hate). Among the flowers I like most, is chamomile, one of the oldest of garden herbs. Not only does this plant have a reputation for its medicinal qualities, but it provides a wonderful addition to sunny borders. It attracts a variety of beneficial insects to the garden, and can provide a fragrant backdrop to the summer landscape.

It is reported that the Egyptians dedicated chamomile to their gods because of its curative powers. The name actually comes from two Greek words: kamai (on the ground), and melon (an apple): ground apple. The plant has been grown for centuries as a common domestic medicine in English gardens. Chamomile comes in both single and double-flowering forms. The double-flowered form was well-known in the sixteenth century, and was introduced to Germany from Spain during the end of the Middle Ages. Unfortunately, chamomile is often overlooked today as a plant in U.S. gardens despite the wonderful apple-like, sweet fragrance of its blossoms. When walked on, chamomile gives off a strong, fragrant scent. For this reason, it was employed as one of the aromatic strewing herbs in the Middle Ages, and used often to be purposely planted in green walks in gardens. In fact, walking over the plant seems to stimulate its growth.

Common chamomile (Anthemis nobilis) is a low-growing plant, creeping or trailing. It sends out tufts of leaves and flowers about a foot high. Its also called “Roman Chamomile.” It is part of the family of plants known as Asteraceae (Compositae). There are two other primary varieties: German, or Wild, Chamomile (Matricaria chamomilla), and Stinking Mayweed (Anthemis cotula).

Roman chamomile has a perennial root that is jointed and fibrous. Its stems are somewhat hairy, freely branching and covered with thread-like leaves that give the plant a feathery appearance. Blossoms appear in late summer – from July onward – and are borne solitarily on erect stalks. Each flower of true chamomile also has a tiny bract at the bottom, which is a distinguishing feature of chamomile. The blossoms look somewhat like daisies with an outer fringe of white florets and yellow centers. This perennial can be used as a groundcover since it grows only four to twelve inches in height.

The German chamomile has flower-heads about three-fourths of an inch wide, with about 15 white strap-shaped florets and numerous tubular yellow florets. It grows in the wild, mostly in cornfields. It is not ranked as a true chamomile (It does not possess tiny bracts among the florets – which is a sign of true chamomile). It has a strong smell, but is less aromatic than the Roman variety. This perennial form of chamomile grows to about 20 inches tall.

Stinking Mayweed (Anthemis cotula) is an annual that grows freely in waste areas. It resembles true chamomile with its large solitary flower, but like the German chamomile has no scales at the base of the flowers. This variety has a fetid, unpleasant odor, somewhat resembling rotting fennel. The juice of this plant is acrid and produces blisters on the hands of anyone who touches it. The whole plant is poisonous and grows about 18 inches tall.

All chamomiles require a sunny situation to do well. The single variety flourishes in dry, sandy soil. The double-flowered chamomile needs a richer soil and gives the heaviest crop of blooms in moist, stiff loam. Both types of plant require good drainage.

Propagation of the plants may be done by seed sowing in the open in May, and then by transplanting the seedlings when they are large enough to handle. The Roman chamomile is usually propagated by root division.

Dried flowers from both the Roman and German chamomiles are used in herbal teas. Flowers from the Roman chamomile are sometimes used in making beer, where the essential oil serves as a mild flavoring.

Nothing is more appealing than to walk near or on chamomile in the summer garden. It is a lovely plant worth enjoying even though it attracts bees. While the flowers are relatively small, this is a plant that should be a part of every summer garden.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

As soon as the weather warms, activity on the East End picks up. After months of winter doldrums and a slowdown in the real estate market, many realtors here are ready for spring.

The Hamptons Realty Group's message to buyers is seize the day. Principal broker Htun Han, of the Amagansett office, says that buyers in the Hamptons have been given a rare break. His offices predict that the market will be picking up speed over the next three to six months. "If anyone is serious about buying, we are advising them that now is an excellent time."

He advises sellers to be confident but realistic and to price properties as accurately as possible. "Serious sellers," says Mr. Han, "who are pricing their homes realistically are selling them fast. Those who feel they will wait until the market catches up are doing just that - waiting." J. R. Sawicki, the agency's Water Mill broker, feels that the market is strong but sane. "That's great for buyers who have aggressively competed for homes in the past."

Broker Pat O' Donoghue, of the Southampton office, says that as far as the winter doldrums go, it was more about psychology than any fundamental weakness in the East End market. Endless talk all winter about the "bubble bursting" turned into a self-fulfilling prophecy. Buyers lost confidence while reading about other markets. There is a backsliding to the real estate market in other areas that should not be confused with what is going on here, however. The East End market is a unique one. "There are no underlying reasons at all that the Hamptons market should suffer any protracted slowdown," Mr. O' Donoghue added. "There is a limited supply here, and there will always be a demand, period."

People want to be here regardless of the cost and there will always be high-end buyers and renters flocking east each season. "Not only do buyers want to be on the East End and nowhere else, they are very specific about certain neighbor- hoods and areas," comments East Hampton broker Stan Esposito. He also alluded to how different today's market is compared to ten years ago. When buyers could not find a home they wanted to buy, they purchased land and built a dream house. Today, with almost no land available, buyers looking for a certain locale are prepared to renovate what they find to their specifications. It is very common for buyers to purchase a home and then tear it down to build what they really want. In this market, even tiny cottages or summer bungalows in a highly sought after area can get for close to a million dollars.

Currently, in Sag Harbor, an 1100 sq ft 1950s cottage is for sale on a quiet village side street only three blocks from Havens Beach. It has two bedrooms and 2 baths and is set on a .23-acre lot. The property is priced at $965,000.

The location is excellent and smack in the heart of the historic district. It is listed with Allan M. Schneider & Associates in Sag Harbor.

The only market comparable to ours is New York's, where a 1100sq ft, 1-bedroom, 1-bath, craftsman-style co-op with spectacular city views from the terrace just sold on the Upper West Side for $1,050,000. The property, located on West End Avenue, which was first listed at $1,099,000, sold in less than two months. It was listed by the Ilan Bracha Group and sold by Prudential Douglas Elliman.

REWRITING HISTORY?

Dear Dan,

I wanted to let you know how much I enjoy your paper. As a matter of fact whenever I visit Montauk or Greenport, I don't really have my "East End feeling" until I get a copy of Dan's Papers.

I especially like your articles about history and Long Island. Recently, however, there have been quite a few historical errors in at least two of your pieces. One had to do with Theodore Roosevelt, the 1912 campaign, his being shot and being an American History teacher (and a former Park Ranger at Sagamore Hill).

I almost wrote to you noting the incorrect facts about where he was shot, Taft's and Wilson's political parties, etc., but decided against it. Now, however, after reading more factual errors in your March 3, article about Einstein, I feel compelled to. In one sentence, you write that FDR was in "Hot Springs, Arkansas" where he died from a "massive heart attack." Actually, he was in Warm Springs, Georgia and died from a cerebral hemorrhage. The bomb was dropped four months after he died, not three.

Just thought I would let you know.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Stephen Gilroy
Manhasset

PS: Now I don't have to go out east to get your terrific paper. I can get it every week at Blueberries Grocery Store in my town, so I'm thrilled!

Glad to get a letter from Manhasset. -DR

THE WINDS OF CHANGE

Dear Dan,

Re: The article "Denied" in 3/17/06 edition, on page 31, you stated that "Bad" Josiah Kirk was taken away and died. In the Arms House."

I think you meant Alms House. As everybody should know, an Arms House is where you can buy arms-the bang/bang kind.

Also if this story was true. I hope that the next Nor'easter takes those big boulders and sends them through the windows that 'Mr. Simpson' is "watching every fisherman's jeep" from.

Or maybe the ghost of Josiah Kirk will haunt this house; we can only hope!

Lastly, keep up the good work!

Lloyd N. Booth
East Quogue

Believe it or not, the historic document I quoted had "Arms House." A long ago typographical error done again.

-DR

LIBERAL LABEL

Dear Dan,

Re: Patrick Henry

"Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God. I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death!"

Patrick Henry (Speech to the Virginia Convention, 23 March 1775)

I am a liberal.

Liberal = Liberate

Andrew G. Benjamin

Liberate what? -DR

GPS OOPS

Dear Dan,

You wrote: "The European Union has just announced a new satellite system which will compete with the United States-based GPS system, but with images as detailed as one foot."

I think you are confused about the way these systems work. GPS satellites do not take pictures - they are synchronized atomic clocks that fly around the earth in precisely defined orbits and broadcast what time it is to specialized receivers on the ground.

There are many computer programs such as USAPhotomaps and Google Earth that can display the available public imagery at your position as determined by a handheld GPS receiver, but the GPS satellite system has no role in taking those images.

John Sperr
Via e-mail

I stand corrected. - DR

ART ART EVERYWHERE

Dear Dan,

When re-doing our downstairs bathroom, we wanted original artwork for the walls. What better than summertime covers of Dan's Papers to complement our beachy "cabana" theme? The only problem was choosing which four covers to use.

Thanks Dan and all the wonderful and talented East End artists.

AN OILY ARGUMENT

Dear Dan,

Every day there are more bombs, more American and Iraqi deaths. Congress just raised the debt ceiling because of this insane war. How many innocent lives have to be lost, how many young kids have to come home maimed and how bankrupt does America have to become before Congress will have the gumption to stop the madness. George Bush has lost all legitimacy, lying to get us into this war and now he is threatening Iran. Congress needs to have the courage to take a stand. In the November elections we need to put representatives into office that can stand up for Americans not for Big Oil.

Police Blotter

Floor Safe

A man in Sagaponack reported to police officers that somebody stole his floor safe while he was away from his home. Fortunately, the criminal fell through the man's old floor while carrying the safe out of the house. Police are simply floored by the turn of events.

Mailbox Post Cut

A man in Sag Harbor gave the cops a call when he pulled up to his home and found that his mailbox had been cut down at the base. It was not reported that the mailbox was stolen, however. Cutting down a mailbox is a federal crime. The State, Federal and Mailbox police are conducting a full investigation.

Purse Problem

Four more women have reported in the past two weeks that their purses have been stolen out of their cars while parked at the beaches in Bridgehampton and Hampton Bays. Police are continuing their investigation to find the parties responsible. When they do catch the criminals, all of the women plan to beat them with their purses.

* * *

Disrobing

A woman in East Hampton called police and reported that she saw a man "disrobing" on David's Lane. Police caught up with the man, and found that he had another jacket underneath the sweatshirt he took off. He said that his sweatshirt was wet from sweating, so he took it off so it would dry in the sun. Police stood back for a second and were reported saying, "So wait a second, somebody called us down here because they saw you taking off your sweatshirt and you had clothing on underneath? You have got to be kidding me."

Lots To Drink

Six bottles of Scotch and $40 to $80 in cash were taken from a house in East Hampton. There were no signs of forced entry into the home. Police responded to the call and found a bunch of strange, red faced, older men in business suits all sitting around at a table drinking Scotch and smoking cigars in the basement of the home. Police questioned one of the men drinking the Scotch who said, "Bill Brasky is over fifteen feet tall!"

Confused The Numbers

Two house number signs were damaged in Springs. The owners of the house suspect foul play. The owners of the house have had a hard time dealing with the many confused UPS drivers showing up at their doorsteps.

Destroyed Fence

The chain link fence at the Montauk Skate Park was destroyed last week and will need to be replaced. The replacement cost of the fence is $500. An investigation has been setup to find those who caused the damage. The citizens of Montauk have ruled out that it was the famed Montauk Beast created at Camp Hero during WWII.

Spray Painted

A makeshift bed of a pickup truck was painted white with spray paint according to the trucks owner who reported the painting to police. It is estimated to cost $500 to get it back to its original color. Which is hot pink.

Lower Mortgage Payments by 45%

With Sophisticated Jumbo Loan Program

NY - Mortgages for multi million dollar homes is typically limited to 50% financing, carries a higher rate and requires full income verification.

A scarcely known loan is available for home purchases and refinances that offers up to 90% financing, cuts monthly payments by as much as 45% and requires no income verification. Additionally there are enhanced tax and pre-payment advantages with increased cash flow not available with other mortgages.

Many wonder why they haven't been informed about this unique loan. One reason is this loan does not profit lenders in the same way other loans do so they're not easy to find. The company sponsoring these programs, North Atlantic Mortgage Corp., has made a Free report "Sophisticated Jumbo Financing" available. This report also addresses many other unique types of mortgages, credit issues, and most importantly how to get a great Jumbo loan with no income or asset verification.

If you are self-employed, professional or high-income individual, there are many other savvy "secrets" and various loan options that you probably aren't aware that exist.

Simply call 1-877-794-5363 to request this informative free report.
